FOREWORD

The appearance of this volume at a moment when the people of Indiana are once more girding themselves for the defense of their homes and cities against any eventuality is a testimony to the wisdom of the state authorities who established the War History Commission in 1943. One of the purposes behind the original appointment of the Commission was the hope that lessons learned in one time of trouble might be applied to the possible crises of the future. Now, before the War History Commission has had time to get its study of our war experiences much beyond the blueprint stage, we face such a crisis. But even the blueprint of the state's gigantic war effort in 1940-1945, which is to be found in the pages of this book, will be a most useful reference work for our defense planners.

The Directory will bring back to the minds of thousands of Hoosiers, as it does to mine, vivid memories of those stirring and somewhat bewildering years when we had to adjust our institutions and habits to the strained tempo of a world at war. To those whose names are to be found on its pages, and with whom I am happy and proud to have been associated, it pays a well-deserved though partial tribute. To the still greater number whose names could not be included—those citizens of Indiana who fought the war with money, work and sacrifice while their sons and brothers were fighting it on the battlefields—I add my word of gratitude and the common hope that our efforts may not have been in vain.

HENRY F. SCHRICKER,
Governor of Indiana.

EDITOR'S PREFACE

In the course of six years' preparation, this book has undergone several metamorphoses. Originally conceived, in 1944, as an elaborate continuation of the series of Civilian Defense Manuals which had already been issued by the State Defense Council, with emphasis upon the then existing defense organization, it was later expanded into a roster of all Indiana civilians who had participated at any time and in any way in the war effort. What has ultimately emerged is something different still.

Professor Heber P. Walker, to whom was originally assigned the editorship of the Directory, compiled an enormous mass of data, embracing hundreds of public and private organizations currently engaged in some war-related activity. Much of this material had already been printed in the Defense Manuals and elsewhere, but these sources contained numerous errors and were deficient in many details which were desired for the Directory. Consequently, Mr. Walker began an extensive correspondence with the many people over the state who alone possessed the information which he needed.

As the war came to an end, the practical difficulties in the way of finishing the Directory increased rather than diminished. The liquidation of war-born agencies complicated the problem of obtaining detailed information. Tons of records were packed up and shipped from Indiana to Chicago, Cleveland, or Washington. Other tons disappeared in backyard bonfires as jubilant clerks and secretaries hastened to destroy all reminders of their distasteful wartime jobs. In this way, for example, all official records of membership on War Price and Rationing Boards disappeared forever. Part of the task of compiling this Directory became a problem of gathering circumstantial evidence and painfully piecing it together.

In the meantime, the editors had come to think of the Directory as a civilian counterpart of the Honor Rolls which Hoosier communities maintained in tribute to their sons and daughters in the armed services. This idea of commemorating civilians who gave themselves to the war effort was certainly unique and unquestionably useful, but its sheer magnitude was appalling. In one way or another the war had touched the lives of all Hoosiers and most of them had responded with patriotic and unselfish service. It was obviously impracticable, however, to duplicate the census lists. Some kind of discrimination between those to be included and those to be omitted would have to be adopted. The perplexing question was where to draw the line.

We must admit that our ultimate answer to this question was a compound of necessity, compromise, and expediency rather than the logical and decisive policy we had originally hoped to adopt. The principal criterion, of course, was relative importance to the war effort, but this had to be modified by many other considerations. Attempts to enforce clear-cut dividing lines, such as one between volunteer and compensated personnel, had to be abandoned for the simple reason that they distorted the picture of the war effort. Some arbitrary decisions were made and subsequently followed, although they are admittedly unjust. It was early determined, for example, to confine the listings of government office personnel to directive officials and to exclude clerks and stenographers whose work was primarily routine. This policy unquestionably eliminated from mention thousands of loyal workers who gave maximum effort to the achievement of victory by doing a necessary war job extremely well. We have also excluded, in general, all military personnel. The careful reader, however, will find exceptions to both of these rules where they seemed to be necessary. In other cases, an entire category of organizations has been excluded, or a single organization dropped, or a particular group of officials within an included organization eliminated. Such action has resulted from lack of space, incompleteness of data, or other reasons considered valid by the compilers. In such matters no two people, probably, could ever agree.

The editors have also been faced with the peculiarly unwelcome necessity of omitting from this book many names which were freely submitted by individuals who collected them with considerable effort, and on the other hand, of literally begging for other names from persons who seemed indifferent to the necessity or desirability of furnishing them. This was done in the interest of balance and relative importance. If the Directory had been compiled from the data most readily obtained, it would be a very different but a very much less useful book. We beg forgiveness from the many correspondents who worked diligently to obtain information requested of them and who may now be disappointed at finding no trace of it in this book. We learned, too late, that we had asked for more than we could use. We also apologize, for a different reason, to many who will find that a USO center, a rationing board, or some other local wartime body in which they are particularly interested makes a very poor showing in this volume. The usual reason, in such cases, is the failure of repeated efforts to obtain information by correspondence. There was a limit, in such matters, beyond which we could not profitably persist.

In spite of the bulk of this volume, it represents less than half the material which was originally collected for publication. Lists of names and narrative histories of many organizations not included in the Directory are on file in the archives of the War History Commission where they are open to public inspection. The hundreds of original histories of wartime organizations from which the shorter treatments in this volume have been drawn are also retained in the archives. In addition to these contributed sources, the editors used such a tremendous variety of printed materials in compiling this book that it has been deemed inadvisable even to attempt to print a bibliography. Many of the printed sources are mentioned in the text itself. Others fall into several categories; special compilations such as the five editions of the Indiana Civilian Defense Manual, periodic rosters such as the annual Indiana School Directory, the annual reports of governmental agencies, such as those collected in the Indiana Year Book, the statistical publications of such agencies as the State Employment Security Division, such periodical publications as the Journal of the Indiana State Medical Association, the pamphlets, brochures, and handbooks of private organizations, and histories already published by wartime agencies, such as the Civilian Production Administration's Industrial Mobilization for War, a history of the War Production Board. We were especially fortunate in having access to the complete files of the Indiana Defense Council for the entire war period.

The Directory, at the end of its evolution, is neither the roster which it started out to be, nor a complete history of Indiana's participation in the war, but something intermediate. It is, in fact, a blueprint of the mechanism by which the civilian population of a state caught in the toils of modern war organized itself and concentrated its energies for the essential role which it played in the achievement of victory. One who reviews this picture is impressed with the way in which each diverse organization, agency, and individual, no matter how detached from the others it might have been in time of peace, was fitted into the general wartime pattern. So important did the accurate presentation of this tremendous example of co-ordination seem that the editors in many instances have sacrificed names in order to find space for explanatory text, charts, and maps. It is our sincere hope that we have achieved some success in reducing this enormous canvas to visible proportions so that even those citizens who remember vividly their own activities during the hectic war years will understand them better after glancing through this book.

Although concerned exclusively with peripheral contributions to the war effort, we have been governed in the arrangement of our material by the relative closeness of each organization and agency to the military core. Thus, the first section of the book outlines the governmental organization which conducted the war; the second comprises those agencies which recruited the armed forces; the third concerns civilian participation in the training of the armed forces; the fourth deals with organizations devoted to direct services for military personnel, and so on. This explains what may seem to be a paradox—that in a book on civilian participation in a war, the civilian defense organization should appear in the latter part.

These pages list some 1,800 Hoosier organizations and agencies together with more than 30,000 individuals who participated in their labors. In a work of such magnitude it is impossible to escape numerous errors:—we will be happy if we have reduced them to a small number on each page. To those whose names are mis-spelled or wrongfully omitted, to those whose work we have erroneously described, to those even who may have preferred to remain anonymous, we offer our sincere apologies and the assurance that we strove for accuracy. It should be remembered also that this book is not intended to be current. Designations are limited to the period of the war years, which we have generally taken to be 1940 to 1946. The exceptions to this particular limitation are noted in every case.

These paragraphs are being written at a time when American soldiers are fighting again, in Korea, as they did eight years ago on Bataan and Wake Island. Civilians likewise are re-entering service on Selective Service Boards, civilian defense councils, and USO committees. This volume, therefore, may serve not only as a reminder of the eventful past but also as a guide in the uncertain future.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The groundwork for this volume was laid by Professor Heber P. Walker, who had charge of the project until 1946. Mr. Harland V. Ford and Mrs. Robert Haig did much of the editorial work on Parts Six, Nine, and Eleven. Mr. Richard Roberts assisted with special research on OPA and WPB. Dr. Elfrieda Lang, Mrs. Burt Ford, Miss Peggy Olsen, Mrs. David Kochery, Miss Mary Maillard, and Mrs. Lynn Turner not only performed much of the drudgery connected with the production of so large a book, but contributed valuable criticisms and corrections. Professor Henry Smith of the Fine Arts Department of Indiana University gave generously of his time and wisdom in advice upon typography and design. The librarians of the Indiana University Library, particularly those in the Documents Division and the Archives were unfailingly courteous and helpful in the search for obscure references. Dr. Herman B Wells and Dr. John D. Barnhart, Chairman and Secretary respectively of the War History Commission, have never faltered in their warm and tolerant support of this project. Responsibility for its final organization and for the decisions which resulted in many false starts as well as a finished product rests with the editor, Dr. Lynn W. Turner, Executive Director of the Commission.

To the literally thousands of busy people who took time to collect data for us, to supply information, and even to write letters of encouragement, we tender our profound thanks. We trust that this volume will be adequate compensation for the infinite labor expended upon it. It has been the work of many hands and each of its creators hopes that it may stand as a unique monument to the long-suffering civilian involved in a great war.

SYMBOLS

The following symbols, when appearing before a name anywhere in the Directory, have a definite meaning:

* Indicates a person who died while serving in the position listed after his name.

† Indicates a person who entered the armed forces while serving in the position listed after his name.

Other symbols used from time to time are explained in the footnotes.

ABBREVIATIONS

The following abbreviations are used throughout the Directory. The list, however, does not contain the abbreviations of military titles or of government agencies, each of which is a science in itself, nor those abbreviations so commonly used as to be unmistakable.

INTRODUCTION

ADDRESS BY PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT ON DECEMBER 8, 1941, FOLLOWING THE ATTACK BY JAPAN ON PEARL HARBOR.

To the Congress of the United States:

Yesterday, December 7, 1941—a date which will live in infamy—the United States of America was suddenly and deliberately attacked by naval and air forces of the Empire of Japan.

The United States was at peace with that nation and, at the solicitation of Japan, was still in conversation with its Government and its Emperor looking toward the maintenance of peace in the Pacific. Indeed, 1 hour after Japanese air squadrons had commenced bombing in Oahu, the Japanese Ambassador to the United States and his colleague delivered to the Secretary of State a formal reply to a recent American message. While this reply stated that it seemed useless to continue the existing diplomatic negotiations, it contained no threat or hint of war or armed attack.

It will be recorded that the distance of Hawaii from Japan makes it obvious that the attack was deliberately planned many days or even weeks ago. During the intervening time the Japanese Government has deliberately sought to deceive the United States by false statements and expressions of hope for continued peace.

The attack yesterday on the Hawaiian Islands has caused severe damage to American naval and military forces. Very many American lives have been lost. In addition American ships have been reported torpedoed on the high seas between San Francisco and Honolulu.

Yesterday the Japanese Government also launched an attack against Malaya.

Last night Japanese forces attacked Hong Kong.

Last night Japanese forces attacked Guam.

Last night Japanese forces attacked the Philippine Islands.

Last night the Japanese attacked Wake Island.

This morning the Japanese attacked Midway Island.

Japan has therefore undertaken a surprise offensive extending throughout the Pacific area. The facts of yesterday speak for themselves. The people of the United States have already formed their opinions and well understand the implications to the very life and safety of our Nation.

As Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy I have directed that all measures be taken for our defense.

Always will we remember the character of the onslaught against us.

No matter how long it may take us to overcome this premeditated invasion, the American people in their righteous might will win through to absolute victory.

I believe I interpret the will of the Congress and of the people when I assert that we will not only defend ourselves to the uttermost but will make very certain that this form of treachery shall never endanger us again.

Hostilities exist. There is no blinking at the fact that our people, our territory, and our interests are in grave danger.

With confidence in our armed forces—with the unbounded determination of our people—we will gain the inevitable triumph, so help us God.

I ask that the Congress declare that, since the unprovoked and dastardly attack by Japan on Sunday, December 7, a state of war has existed between the United States and the Japanese Empire.

PUBLIC LAW 328—77th CONGRESS
JOINT RESOLUTION

Declaring that a state of war exists between the Imperial Government of Japan and the Government and the people of the United States and making provisions to prosecute the same.

Whereas the Imperial Government of Japan has committed unprovoked acts of war against the Government and the people of the United States of America: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the state of war between the United States and the Imperial Government of Japan which has thus been thrust upon the United States is hereby formally declared; and the President is hereby authorized and directed to employ the entire naval and military forces of the United States and the resources of the Government to carry on war against the Imperial Government of Japan; and, to bring the conflict to a successful termination, all of the resources of the country are hereby pledged by the Congress of the United States.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES REQUESTING THAT CONGRESS DECLARE THAT A STATE OF WAR EXISTS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND GERMANY, AND BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND ITALY.

To the Congress of the United States:

On the morning of December 11, the Government of Germany, pursuing its course of world conquest, declared war against the United States.

The long known and the long expected has thus taken place. The forces endeavoring to enslave the entire world now are moving toward this hemisphere.

Never before has there been a greater challenge to life, liberty, and civilization.

Delay invites greater danger. Rapid and united effort by all of the people of the world who are determined to remain free will insure a world victory of the forces of justice and of righteousness over the forces of savagery and of barbarism.

Italy also has declared war against the United States.

I, therefore, request the Congress to recognize a state of war between the United States and Germany, and between the United States and Italy.

THE INDIANA WAR HISTORY COMMISSION

Under the sponsorship of the Indiana War History Commission, this Directory and the other volumes recounting the history of Indiana's participation in World War II are published. The Commission was established in April, 1943, by resolution of the Administrative and Advisory Defense Councils, and subsequent action of the Governor. This action was decided upon as the most effective means of carrying out the following part of the amended State Defense Act which became law on March 6, 1943:

"The council is directed to initiate a survey of participation of the State of Indiana in the war effort and prepare a written report to be submitted to the governor as soon as practicable after the war. On April 1 of each year after 1943, a progress report of such survey shall be submitted to the governor. This report shall include, but shall not be limited to (1) the state contribution of manpower; (2) bond purchases and other contributions by citizens of the state; (3) industrial development and production; (4) economic changes; (5) agricultural development and production; (6) changes in government; and (7) social changes and developments."<sup>1</sup>

Governor Schricker appointed forty-one prominent Hoosiers to the original Commission, which held its organizational meeting on December 16, 1943. The staff at Indiana University and the divisional organization for the collection of material were subsequently developed. Funds and facilities were provided by the State Defense Council and by Indiana University.

After the State Defense Council, the parent organization, went out of existence, the War History Commission was re-created in 1947 by the General Assembly as an independent state agency. The Act provided that—

"The Commission shall be composed of such members as will adequately represent all phases of the war effort of the state and shall have a chairman, executive committee and divisional chairmen. The members of the Commission and its officers shall be appointed by the Governor and shall serve without compensation or reimbursement for travel or other expenses incurred in the performance of their duties."<sup>2</sup>

The law further directed the Commission "to write, publish and sell a comprehensive history of the state's war activities,"<sup>3</sup> and "to employ an executive director and such editorial and clerical assistants as may be required to accomplish the purposes of this act."<sup>4</sup> A fund of $40,000 was appropriated to finance the Commission's work and the executive committee was authorized to designate "the Treasurer of Indiana University or some other state official as fiscal agent of the 'Indiana War History Fund.'"<sup>5</sup>

The Commission will go out of existence on July 1, 1957, or at whatever earlier date its work may be completed.

PART ONE
WAR GOVERNMENT

Government serves in peace as well as in war, and sometimes the burdens of one are no less than of the other. However, it could hardly be denied that the demands of a global war brought new, if not additional duties to all public servants. Indiana has a tradition of vigorous wartime administrators: in her galaxy of war governors are James Whitcomb, who served during the Mexican War; Oliver P. Morton, who upheld Lincoln's hands during the War Between the States; James A. Mount, in the War with Spain; and James P. Goodrich, of World War I.

No attempt is made in this part of the Directory to include a complete roster of national, state, and local governmental officials. The list has been arbitrarily limited to officials on the state or national level who occupied positions of primary importance during the trying years of the war. Many of the governmental agencies and officials not included here will be found in later sections of the book, where they are listed in connection with their duties related to the war effort.

HOOSIERS IN FEDERAL ADMINISTRATION

Indiana feels a justifiable pride in her citizens who were called to positions of high responsibility with the Federal Government during the war years. A partial list of these eminent Hoosiers is given below.

This roster makes no pretension at completeness. It is based principally upon the Official Register of the United States, which lists only those supervisory and administrative officials, exclusive of military personnel and postmasters, who are on the payroll of the federal treasury as of each May 1. Further information was sought in newspaper files and solicited by correspondence, with indifferent results. Exhaustive research would undoubtedly add many names to this list, particularly of business men, scientists, and educators who served the government in an advisory capacity or upon brief assignments to specific tasks. Omissions are not intentional, but are due to the haphazard method of research necessarily forced upon the editors.

The principal purpose of this roster is to give a general indication of the positions held in the wartime government by people of Hoosier birth or connection. The majority of these people were Indiana residents at the time of their federal service. For those who were born in Indiana but resident elsewhere, the birthplace is indicated by the symbol b. The name of the institution is given, accompanied by the symbol e., for a few whose connection with the state was an education in one of her colleges or universities. In all other cases, the place of legal residence during the war years is given as the city, where known, and otherwise as the congressional district.

In listing the positions held by each individual, official titles are used with as little abbreviation as is practicable. In some cases, subordinate agencies are listed under the larger governmental unit which eventually absorbed or succeeded them, although some individuals named thereunder may have served before the change in status occurred. No attempt is made to conform meticulously to all the rapid changes in bureaucratic terminology.

STATE GOVERNMENT: THE LEGISLATIVE BRANCH

Listed below are the members of the Eighty-Second, Eighty-Third, and Eighty-Fourth General Assemblies, which guided Indiana through the critical war years. The General Assembly meets biennially for a period of sixty-one days but can be called into special session by the Governor. Two such extra sessions of the Eighty-Third General Assembly were called by Governor Schricker in 1944. The Indiana legislature found it possible to accomplish all of its wartime tasks in a total of 144 working days between 1940 and 1946.<sup>1</sup>

The House of Representatives of the General Assembly consists of 100 members, holding office for a term of two years. The Senate contains 50 members, elected for staggered four-year terms. Boundaries of the senatorial and representative districts, which are supposed to enclose areas of equal population, have remained unchanged since 1921. These constituencies are indicated in one column of the roster below.

PART TWO
FOR THE ARMED SERVICES

The basic, primary need for a nation at war is to fill the ranks of its armed services with men (and women) as rapidly as possible. Total war, with its masses of armed men, requires armies of volunteer workers merely for the task of recruitment. In a republic inherently averse to standing armies, the task of distributing military duty equitably without injury to the armed forces or impairment to essential civilian operations is a difficult and delicate one. To this task, thousands of American citizens rendered devoted service on selective service boards and war procurement committees. In this section of the Directory appear the names of many of the war's unsung heroes.

INDIANA SELECTIVE SERVICE SYSTEM

The Selective Service System, which was the principal agency for recruiting the members of the armed forces in World War II, was authorized by the Burke-Wadsworth bill which became Public Law 783 of the 76th Congress when it was signed by President Roosevelt on September 16, 1940. The core of this law was Section 10, which authorized the President to “create and establish a Selective Service System, and . . . provide for the classification of registrants and of persons who volunteer for induction under this act on the basis of availability for training and service, and . . . establish within the Selective Service System civilian local boards and such other civilian agencies, including appeal boards and agencies of appeal, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act. There shall be created one or more local boards in each county or political subdivision corresponding thereto of each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia. Each local board shall consist of three or more members to be appointed by the President, from recommendations made by the respective Governors or comparable executive officials. No member of any such local board shall be a member of the land or naval forces of the United States, but each member of any such local board shall be a civilian who is a citizen of the United States residing in the county or political subdivision corresponding thereto in which such local board has jurisdiction under rules and regulations prescribed by the President. Such local boards, under rules and regulations prescribed by the President, shall have power within their respective jurisdictions to hear and determine, subject to the right of appeal to the appeal boards herein authorized, all questions or claims with respect to inclusion for, or exemption or deferment from, training and service under this Act of all individuals within the jurisdiction of such local boards. The decisions of such local boards shall be final except where an appeal is authorized in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe. Appeal boards and agencies of appeal within the Selective Service System shall be composed of civilians who are citizens of the United States. No person who is an officer, member, agent, or employee of the Selective Service System, or of any such local or appeal board or other agency, shall be excepted from registration, or deferred from training and service, as provided for in this Act, by reason of his status as such officer, member, agent, or employee;"<sup>1</sup>

After placing the Selective Service System originally under the control of a civilian director, Dr. Clarence A. Dykstra, the President on July 31, 1941, named a native Hoosier, Lt. Col. (now Brigadier General) Lewis B. Hershey, to this office, in which he remained until the system was terminated.

Shortly after the Selective Service Act was passed, the President issued a series of Executive Orders providing for the detailed organization and operation of the system. Under these regulations, the Governors of the states and territories were charged with the administration of the law in their jurisdictions and State Headquarters offices were prescribed. On October 11, 1940, Governor Clifford Townsend appointed Colonel Robinson Hitchcock as State Director of the Indiana Headquarters.

INDIANA STATE SELECTIVE SERVICE HEADQUARTERS

The Headquarters staff consisted of the State Director and his Assistants, nominated by the Governor, and a group of military officers, from all branches of the service, assigned to the office in various advisory capacities. State Headquarters acted as liaison between National Headquarters and the local boards, co-ordinated selective service activities throughout the state, exercised some discretionary and policymaking power within the state's borders, but for the most part worked in an advisory capacity. These functions were assigned to various Divisions.

The Registration and Classification Division was charged with the registration and classification of the manpower of the State and the supervision, training and co-ordination of the activities engaged in classification and registration, including a Field Division and the cases of delinquents.

The Mobilization Division functions were listed as the induction and delivery of classified registrants to mobilization camps and the supervision of the processes of induction and delivery under quotas and calls.

The Medical Division was charged with the necessary training and co-ordination of those engaged in physical examination of registrants.

The Finance and Supply Division, which was headed by the State Procurement Officer, became the Procurement Division. This division was charged with the responsibility of disbursing and accounting of Selective Service funds, and the procurement and distribution of supplies and equipment.

The principal duty of the Public Relations Division was to keep the public informed of the complex procedures involved in the selective service process and to overcome the confusion and misinformation which often prevailed in regard to new developments.

The Personnel Division was organized to bring the compensated personnel throughout the entire system in Indiana into harmony with Civil Service standards and to centralize payroll and employment records.

Although the Legal Division was not organized until January, 1946, officers with legal training were engaged from the beginning in making rulings upon the innumerable juridical questions which arose in the interpretation of selective service laws and regulations.

On December 15, 1944, the Manpower Division, incorporating the functions of several earlier sections, was established. It had the responsibility of supervising classification, occupational deferment, and co-ordination of the local boards and of determining the calls for men, prior to both preinduction examinations and induction, to be levied on local boards.

Part of the Manpower Division was the Field Section which existed under various names throughout the history of the organization. Its representatives traveled about the state, visiting local boards with the purpose of bringing about as much uniformity as possible in state practice.

The Veterans' Personnel Division was created to advise local Reemployment Committeemen in their duties and to dispose of such cases as could not be satisfactorily resolved at the local level.

LOCAL BOARDS

Pursuant to Part 603 of the Selective Service Regulations, the State of Indiana was divided into Local Board areas by the Governor, with at least one separate Local Board area in each of the 92 counties. For each Local Board area, with the exception of Lake County and St. Joseph County, three members were appointed by the President upon the recommendation of the Governor. In Lake County and St. Joseph County, five members were appointed for each Local Board area. These appointees had the following qualifications:

Male citizens of the United States, at least 38 years old, not members of the land or naval forces. With few exceptions they were residents of the area which their Board served and, in any event, were residents of the county in which their local board had jurisdiction.

On October 14, 1940, Governor Townsend announced the names of the 488 men originally recommended to the President for appointment to Indiana's 152 local boards.

One hundred and seventy of these men remained in service throughout the entire existence of the selective service program. Seventeen local boards kept their membership intact throughout the period.

Upon the shoulders of these local board members rested the principal task of the selective service system. It was their duty to classify all registrants under their jurisdiction, to pass upon deferments and exemptions and to fill their quotas for each draft call. This was one of the most arduous civilian tasks of the war.

GOVERNMENT APPEAL AGENTS

For each local board, a government appeal agent was appointed by the President, upon recommendation of the Governor. His duties were to "appeal from any classification by a local board which, in his opinion, should be reviewed by the board of appeal; to care for the interests of ignorant registrants and their dependents with respect to appeals . . . and, after classification, to investigate and report upon matters which are submitted for his investigation by the local board."<sup>1</sup> He was also authorized to suggest the reopening of any case to the board, and to expedite the examination of the records of registrants.

Associate government appeal agents were appointed in the same manner to boards where the agent made a justifiable request for assistance. Their work was delegated to them by the agents.

EXAMINING PHYSICIANS AND DENTISTS

Selective service regulations required the President to appoint, from a list of persons recommended by the Governor, one or more examining physicians and one or more examining dentists for each local board.<sup>1</sup> Their duties were to give physical examinations to registrants as required by the local boards.

Since all persons named below were either Doctors of Medicine or Doctors of Dental Science, these titles will be omitted in individual listings.

REEMPLOYMENT COMMITTEEMEN

One or more reemployment committeemen were appointed for each local board by the Director of Selective Service upon recommendation of the State Director. Their duties were to "render aid in the replacement in their former positions of, or in securing new positions for" persons who had satisfactorily completed any period of training or active duty under selective service, or subsequent to May 1, 1940.<sup>1</sup>

ADVISORY BOARDS FOR REGISTRANTS

Selective Service Regulations required that the Governor appoint Advisory Boards for registrants "to insure that advice and assistance in preparing Selective Service Questionnaires (Form 40), claims, or other papers which will serve as a basis for classification are readily available to every registrant."<sup>1</sup> It was suggested that each board consist of three lawyers and that the chairman be, if practicable, a judge. The Indiana board chairmen, however, were drawn largely from the ranks of school administrators. A chairman was appointed for each of the congressional districts. In many cases, he appointed county boards for each county within the district, and some of these selected members for each local board within the county. Thus there were, altogether, 3662 members of Advisory Boards for Registrants within the state. Only the Chairmen of these boards can be listed here.

BOARDS OF APPEAL

Twelve Boards of Appeal were originally established in Indiana, one for each Congressional District. Each board consisted of five men, appointed by the President upon recommendation of the Governor, and representative of labor, industry, law, medicine and, where applicable, agriculture. Members were civilian male citizens of the United States, residents of the area under the jurisdiction of the board, at least 38 years old. It was the duty of these boards to review and affirm or change any decision appealed to them from the local boards in their areas or from other boards according to law.<sup>1</sup>

The number of boards in Indiana was reduced to eleven in 1942 when the state was redistricted, but raised again to twelve when a new panel, covering six counties which had formerly been within the area of Board No. 8, was established in 1943. Two panels were authorized for Board No. 11 after 1942 when it was given jurisdiction over all of Marion County. At a later date, the system was changed. One appeal board was established for the entire state and each of the former boards of appeal became panels of this one board. In order to avoid confusion in the presentation below, the original boards of appeal will be listed, with footnotes as to their later histories.

<sup>16</sup> Set up 2-18-43, to relieve the heavy pressure on Board No. 11 after Board No. 12 had been abolished. Members reappointed to Indiana Board of Appeal, Group II, 1-1-46.

<sup>17</sup> This new Board No. 12, as contrasted with the older Board No. 12 abolished 4-7-42, was created 4-17-43 with jurisdiction over six counties formerly within the area served by Board No. 8. Later became Panel No. 13.

MEDICAL ADVISORY BOARDS

In Indiana, one Medical Advisory Board was established for each Board of Appeal originally set up by congressional districts, making twelve altogether. Members of the boards were appointed by the Governor. They were, if practicable, to be specialists in internal medicine; eye, ear, nose and throat; orthopedics; surgery; psychiatry; clinical pathology; radiography; and dentistry.

Upon proper request, a medical advisory board was to "examine and submit a report on the physical and mental fitness for service of a registrant who has been rejected for or separated from either military service or work of national importance under civilian direction," or "of any assignee who is performing work of national importance. . . ."<sup>1</sup>

<sup>4</sup>The members of Board 11-B, created after the Twelfth Congressional District was abolished, were originally members of Board 12.

PROCUREMENT AND ASSIGNMENT SERVICE

The Procurement and Assignment Service, through which the armed forces were supplied with the necessary medical, dental, nursing and veterinarian personnel, was established in the Office of Defense Health and Welfare Services by the President on October 30, 1941. In 1942, it was transferred to the War Manpower Commission and remained under that agency until the end of the war. It was largely at the instance of the national professional associations that this agency, rather than Selective Service, was allowed to plan and supervise the recruitment of doctors and nurses. Under this program, all physicians, dentists and veterinarians registered under Selective Service, except those who accepted commissions as reserve officers, were placed in deferred classifications. The Procurement and Assignment Service then became responsible for seeing that a sufficient number of them took commissions in the armed forces.

PROCUREMENT AND ASSIGNMENT SERVICE FOR PHYSICIANS

The Indiana State Medical Association anticipated the establishment of the Procurement and Assignment Service in this state by the creation of a Mobilization Day Committee in 1939.<sup>1</sup> After Pearl Harbor, this group became the War Participation Committee and subsequently the Advisory Committee for the State Chairman of the Procurement and Assignment Service, Dr. Charles R. Bird, who was appointed to his volunteer post by Paul V. McNutt in July, 1942. His committee had already accomplished much of its work. County P & A Committees had been organized by every local medical society in the state and each had drawn up a list of physicians within its area available for military service. With the groundwork thus laid, it was possible for a special Recruiting Board in Indiana to finish its work by the middle of July, 1942, when every available doctor had been commissioned. Indiana ultimately contributed 1,275 physicians to the armed services—more than a third of the number in active practice in 1940.

An even more delicate function assumed by Dr. Bird and the War Participation Committee was the attempted allocation of those physicians who remained at home to the areas where a stringent deficiency of medical care had developed. The majority of civilian doctors, including the aged and infirm whose sense of duty impelled them to resume active practice, gave heroic service to the civilian population whose physical well-being was hardly less important to the nation's war effort than that of the men in uniform. Many of these 4-F and superannuated men whose lives were shortened by the strain of overwork became genuine war casualties.

PROCUREMENT AND ASSIGNMENT COMMITTEE FOR DENTISTS

The Indiana State Dental Association created a Military Preparedness Committee at its annual session in May, 1941<sup>3</sup>. In due time, this committee became a Procurement and Assignment Committee. Working through the media of the state organization and of District Committees covering every county in the state, the Committee succeeded in furnishing four hundred and thirty-five Indiana dentists for the armed forces.

PROCUREMENT AND ASSIGNMENT COMMITTEE FOR VETERINARIANS

Veterinarians in Indiana were organized for emergency war work through a State Preparedness Committee created by the Indiana Veterinary Medical Association. The chairman of this committee was in due time appointed state officer for the Veterinary P&A Service and, through his committee, obtained the voluntary support of Indiana's veterinarians for the recruitment needs of the armed services.

PROCUREMENT AND ASSIGNMENT SERVICE FOR NURSES

Although, in 1943, nurses were added to the list of personnel to be controlled by the Procurement and Assignment Service, they actually constituted a distinct problem. This was partly due to the fact that few of them were subject to induction through Selective Service and partly to other complicating factors not always present in the case of physicians and dentists. Because of the complexity of the nurses' procurement organization, it is presented later in this volume in connection with the Indiana State Nurses Association.<sup>5</sup>

CIVILIAN AIDES

In the early months of the defense period and for some time after Pearl Harbor, the Civilian Aide to the Army 5th Corps Area Commander and his deputies were active in assisting young men to prepare for the physical and mental examinations for entrance into U. S. Army flying schools.

DOGS FOR DEFENSE

Dogs for Defense was a national voluntary organization of dog fanciers which assumed the task of providing "volunteer" dogs for the U. S. Army's famous K-9 Command. It was organized on December 31, 1941, and shortly thereafter regional directors were appointed for states and areas. Mrs. Margaret Roberts, first Regional Director for Indiana, began the shipment of dogs from Marion County. Her successor, Mr. Frank Ward, expanded the organization throughout the state by appointing local recruiting chairmen who served virtually for the duration of the war, although few dogs were recruited after December, 1943. The Indiana organization recruited 1,150 dogs at a cost of a fraction of a cent per animal. Its expenses were met by donations.

PART THREE

TRAINING AND EDUCATION

Modern warfare makes such heavy demands upon the intellects of its servitors that training and education are hardly less important than original procurement to the armed services. World War II was distinguished by the degree to which military men recognized and utilized the facilities of civilian educational institutions for military training. Hardly a school building in Indiana, from the high school manual training shop to the university electronics laboratory, failed to contribute its resources to the war effort, and none escaped the pervading influence of war.

The process of training for war, like that of education for peace, has so many ramifications that no pretense of confining it within the following pages can be established. This section of the Directory attempts only to outline the accomplishments of Indiana's educational system and to name the individuals who were chiefly responsible for those accomplishments.

A few educational activities outside the classroom walls are included in this section. Many agencies and organizations, however, incorporated educational functions which are more appropriately treated in direct connection with their programs than in this section.

STATE DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION

The elementary and secondary schools of Indiana, both public and private, contributed such a variety of services to the war effort that it would require many pages merely to enumerate them. For the most part their work was accomplished through the regular classroom organization—administrators, teachers and pupils alike giving many hours of voluntary service to bond and stamp sales, scrap drives, rationing programs and innumerable other activities. Every name appearing in each issue of the Indiana School Directory during the war years records a person of devoted patriotism who deserves a place in this volume. It is unfortunate that the limitations of space make it impossible to repeat these lists here.

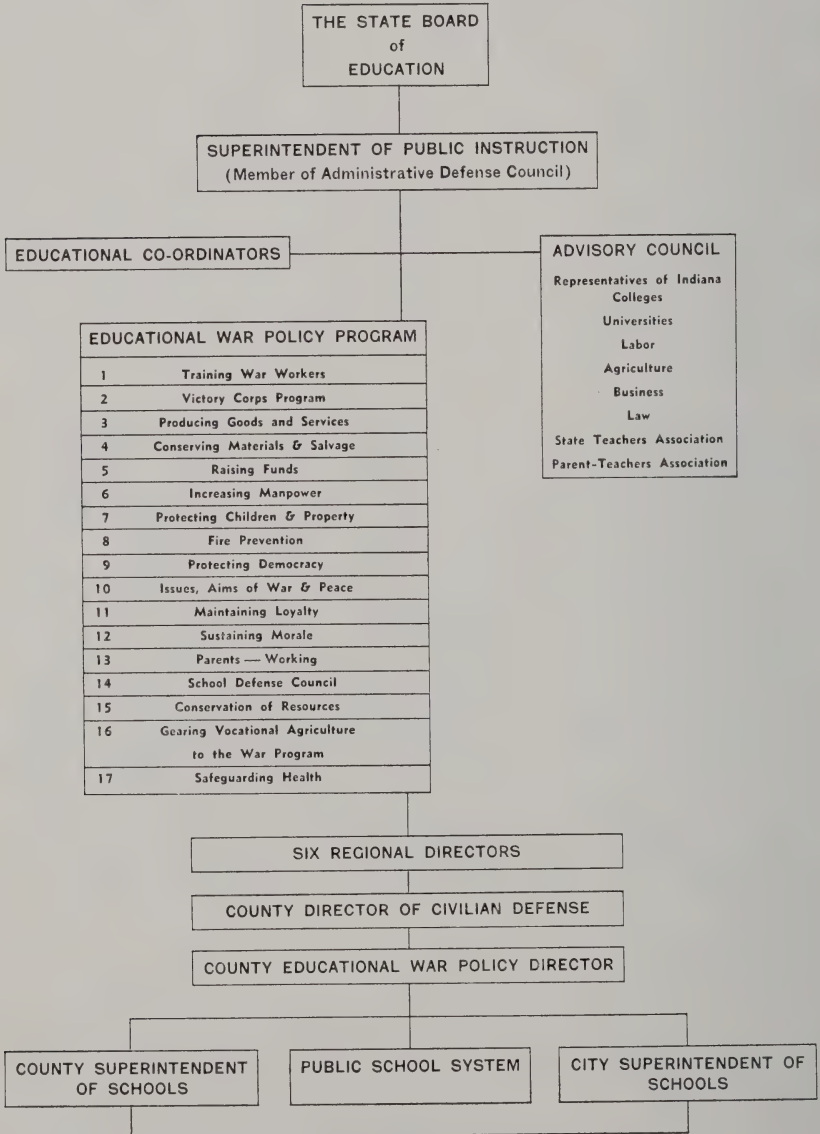

To organize and co-ordinate this vast activity, the State Department of Public Instruction assumed a logical initiative. The State Defense Act of 1941 made the State Superintendent of Public Instruction an ex officio member of the Administrative Council of the civilian defense administration. In cooperation with the United States Office of Education, the state department set up an Educational War Policy Program in June, 1942, which proceeded to gear the public schools to an intensified war program, emphasizing physical fitness, mathematics, physics and other subjects designed for the emergency.<sup>1</sup> In this program, Superintendent Malan assigned special co-ordinating functions to the regular members of his staff and appointed a number of advisory committees, composed of educators and representatives of other vocations, to expand the curricula of the schools in war-related fields.

STATE BOARD OF EDUCATION

The Board of Education which supervises the state's educational activities consisted, until 1944, of eight members appointed by the Governor for four year terms and the Superintendent of Public Instruction. In 1944, the Board was increased to eighteen appointed members and divided into three Commissions, each consisting of eight members and the Superintendent of Public Instruction who was ex officio chairman of each commission.

All high school students were eligible to membership in the Victory Corps, which attempted to prepare students more definitely for their responsibilities as citizens of a nation at war, and to guide them into useful and proper activities after the termination of their school preparation. Juniors and seniors were admitted into five special divisions: (1) Land service, (2) Air service, (3) Sea service, (4) Production service, (5) Community service.

Under this program, teachers of vocational agriculture organized day, evening and part-time classes to reach school boys, out-of-school rural youth and practising farmers with instruction in methods of (1) increasing production, (2) care and repair of farm machinery, (3) recruiting and training farm labor, (4) conservation of food, health and energy, and (5) salvage. These teachers also organized and conducted Rural War Production Training classes under the administration of the War Production Training Program.

| Home Economics contributed to the special service divisions of the Victory Corps by training pupils in child care, community feeding projects, community gardens, canning, salvage collection, recreational work, Red Cross services, garment making, and producing bandages and other first aid supplies. Night classes for adults were conducted in problems of nutrition and health, production and processing of food supply, planning family meals, and making money and ration point budgets. |                   |

| James R. Crawley | Supervisor, Vocational Rehabilitation |

This division provides for the training, in schools and industries, of physically handicapped persons. The State Selective Service System referred 50,000 4-F cases to the Rehabilitation Division for correctional training during the war. Six hundred veterans were referred to the Division before their training was taken over by the Veterans Administration. Disabilities acquired by civilians, including maritime workers, defense workers, and discharged veterans are now the responsibility of the state division.

INDIANA PLAN FOR EMERGENCY MATHEMATICS

This plan was formulated by a special committee, refined by an advisory committee and presented to the high schools in the form of five directives from the state office. The principal objective was to give high school juniors and seniors a comprehensive review of practical mathematics preparatory to war service.

STATE ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON SOCIAL STUDIES

This committee, appointed by the State Superintendent in December, 1943, was given the task of revising the social studies program in the public schools in order to meet certain immediate wartime objectives and to plan for the postwar period. Greater emphasis in the school curriculum was given to the background, causes and purposes of the war itself, to the changes wrought by the war in government and society, and to the new conceptions of geography arising from the global nature of warfare.

INDIANA WAR FILMS COUNCIL

The State Defense Council, the State Department of Public Instruction and the four state educational institutions joined to form this agency, which began to function in April, 1943. It served as a clearing house for the distribution of pictures on war and civilian defense subjects to schools and other interested bodies.

THE COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES

Indiana's forty-three institutions of higher learning were probably more seriously affected by the war than any other single group of Hoosier enterprises. The armed services absorbed their male students and depleted their faculties. Changed economic conditions disturbed their investments and altered their sources of support. Finally, the government's policy of using established colleges and universities for the training of many of its officers for the enormously expanding armed forces led to new and bewildering experiences in the fields of higher education.

During the war years there were located on Indiana soil four universities, twenty liberal arts colleges, four teacher-training institutions, ten professional or technological schools, four junior colleges, and one constituent college of an out-of-state university. The state supported four of these institutions, and of the remainder, two were municipal, twenty-three denominational, and fourteen private. Thirty-one of these institutions were coeducational, eight were for men only and four were devoted solely to the education of women. Sixteen Indiana colleges and universities had contracts with the government for training units in the armed forces and three others held training schools for conscientious objector relief units. The contributions of these institutions are treated in detail in the following section.

The fact that the twenty-four remaining colleges are not specifically listed here does not indicate that they made no contribution to the war effort. Each served the nation as best it could. All accelerated their scholastic calendars and modified their curricula in the interests of wartime education. Their students enlisted in the reserve corps, took part-time jobs in war industries, sold war bonds and helped in scrap drives. St. Mary's College (near South Bend) gave two Civil War cannon to a salvage campaign. Some Indiana colleges, such as St. Joseph's, offered their facilities to the armed services but were not chosen for a training program. The technical schools and the engineering departments of colleges such as Valparaiso University provided shops and instructors for industrial training classes conducted by Purdue University. The women's colleges organized Red Cross units and gave special physical fitness courses for their students. The art schools conducted drafting courses and the music schools provided entertainment at army camps. The theological seminaries produced chaplains. In one way or another, every institution of higher learning in Indiana contributed to the war effort.

BALL STATE TEACHERS COLLEGE

Muncie

Two major military programs were drawn to the campus of Ball State Teachers College. The first was a Civilian Pilot Training program which began in the fall of 1939, and was stepped up to a War Training Service program in July, 1942. The college provided ground school instruction and flight training was offered by the Muncie Aviation Corporation. Open at first to all students, this program was later confined to Army Air Corps Reserve trainees and Navy V-5 personnel. Elementary and secondary courses, each of eight weeks duration, called for 240 hours of ground instruction and 35 to 45 hours of flight instruction. In accordance with the contract between the Civil Aeronautics Administration and the college, board, room, transportation, insurance and ground school instruction were furnished by the latter at the expense of the Federal Government. Between the time of its inception in 1939 and its termination by an order from the Navy in August, 1944, this program accepted 1444 trainees.

An Army Specialized Training Unit was established on the campus in July, 1943, and withdrawn on March 15, 1944. The definitive contract provided for instruction, textbooks, equipment, housing, medical service, subsistence and incidental services to be furnished by the college at determined rates. Training was given to 507 men under this program.

BUTLER UNIVERSITYIndianapolis*

With one of the largest fieldhouses in the nation, Butler University could offer attractive facilities for the training of units in the armed forces. Two military programs were commissioned in succession on the Butler campus.

In June, 1942, the U. S. Navy established a Signal Training School at the Fieldhouse under the command of Lt. H. C. Sigtenhorst, USNR. Facilities were created for the housing, feeding and training of 800 men. Instruction was entirely by naval personnel and little contact was had with the college. The Signal School closed in May, 1943, when the Fieldhouse was turned over to the U. S. Army.

It was decided in February, 1943, that the Naval Training School would be replaced with the 52nd College Training Detachment of the U. S. Army Air Corps, under the command of Captain Samuel C. Gist. In December, 1943, Major W. E. Sayer succeeded Captain Gist in command. Butler University not only housed, fed and entertained the cadets in this unit, but offered the major part of their training in physics, mathematics, English, history, geography, speech and civil air regulations. The fledgling flyers also received ten hours of flight instruction at the Hoosier and Sky Harbor airports in Indianapolis. Approximately 5,000 men received training in this unit before it closed in June, 1944.

DePAUW UNIVERSITYGreencastle*

When, early in the war, the Navy Department announced its intention of using the facilities of selected colleges and universities to train men for the Navy during the period of national emergency, two training programs were assigned to DePauw University; one designed to provide preliminary training for naval aviation cadets, and the other to give prospective naval officers the benefits of college education in those areas most needed by the Navy.

On January 7, 1943, the first battalion of naval aviation cadets entered the DePauw Naval Flight Preparatory School, commonly known as the V-5 program. From that time cadets entered at the rate of approximately 200 per month. The NFPS unit closed officially on August 11, 1944. Approximately 2300 cadets had been given preliminary training at DePauw.

On July 1, 1943, the Navy V-12 program enrolled 400 apprentice seamen in the various officer-candidate curricula. At the close of the summer semester, 1945, the DePauw V-12 unit had trained 1137 men for the Navy.

DePauw's adjustments to war conditions included a streamlining of the academic calendar to provide almost continuous instruction throughout the year; major changes in the curriculum; a vastly increased enrollment of young women students; the release of twenty percent of the faculty for military service with the remaining eighty percent assuming extra burdens of teaching; participation by the university, faculty and students in all bond drives and Red Cross enrollments; and contributions from civilian and military personnel to the Greencastle blood bank. One unique service was the organization of DePauw men under Willard E. Umbreit, secretary of admissions, to meet a threatened labor shortage, particularly in agriculture. Finally, DePauw planned carefully for the postwar period, with eight special faculty committees examining the probable readjustments of peacetime and the university's particular obligation to veteran students.

NAVAL TRAINING UNIT V-12

The contract for this unit provided that DePauw would furnish instruction, housing, feeding, athletic facilities, and medical services for a maximum quota of 600 Navy V-12 trainees. Courses of instruction in this program were those of the regular college curriculum, taught by the regular college staff, many of whom also taught in the V-5 school.

CHEMICAL RESEARCH

DePauw University signed a contract with the Office of Scientific Research and Development under which the Chemistry Department carried out investigations in connection with the synthesis of organic compounds for use as antimalarials. This work was done by certain members of the staff together with their assistants.

EARLHAM COLLEGE

Richmond

On July 1, 1943, seventeen men selected from Civilian Public Service camps under the supervision of the American Friends Service Committee arrived at the Earlham campus for what was intended to be six to nine months' training for overseas relief duty. This training program was initiated on authority of an order by General Hershey, in which approximately 260 men chosen from various C. P. S. camps were assigned to a new camp at Philadelphia under the joint supervision of Mennonites, Brethren and Friends, to be reassigned to selected colleges for actual training. One hundred of these men were assigned to the Friends Service Committee, and a group of twenty-five was allocated to Earlham.

Eight of the men selected for Earlham were prohibited from attending since they had not left camp before the War Appropriation Bill for 1943-44, prohibiting the use of federal funds for the training or support of C. O. overseas relief units, was passed by Congress. The remaining seventeen men were permitted to continue in training until August 28. Together with women students and other men not subject to military service, they were given a rigorous course in area and language studies, relief administration and the philosophy of the Society of Friends.

EVANSVILLE COLLEGEEvansville*

On October 1, 1939, Evansville College inaugurated a C.A.A. Civilian Pilot Training program. Ground school instruction was given on the campus and flight instruction at the Municipal Airport under competent licensed pilots. Two hundred and forty-five students, including 77 Army cadets, were trained in this program.

In July, 1942, the college was selected by the U. S. Navy for the training of naval aviation cadets. Trainees were originally housed in the Evansville YMCA building, but after they were placed on active duty in 1943, the college took over a former CCC camp at Audubon Park, Kentucky, where the men were housed, fed, and given ground school instruction. They were transported by bus to the airport for flight training. Three hundred and twenty-two trainees were assigned to this program before it was discontinued on January 19, 1944.

In addition to these contractual services to the armed forces, the college also sponsored an aviation refresher course for young men preparing to take the mental screening tests required for admission into the flight cadet programs. It co-operated with Indiana and Purdue Universities in offering ESMWT courses and with the various enlisted reserve programs of the Army and Navy. It was the first college in the nation to offer a college Nurse's Aide class and it gave a number of Red Cross First Aid courses.

GOSHEN COLLEGEGoshen*

The President of Goshen College, a Mennonite institution, conceived the basic idea of establishing, in the colleges maintained by the historic peace churches, training schools for overseas relief units in which conscientious objectors might serve their country according to their convictions in a manner paralleling the training of reserve officers for the Army and Navy in other colleges. The end result of much planning in this direction was approval by General Hershey and the organization of several training units, one of which opened at Goshen College on June 14, 1943.

The personnel of the Goshen unit consisted of sixteen girls and sixty-six conscientious objectors, nearly all of whom were of the Mennonite faith. A third of the men came from Mennonite colleges and the remaining two-thirds from CPS camps and other projects. They were trained in relief techniques, historic and geographic backgrounds, and physical endurance. Goshen College furnished instruction, housing, mess, and recreation. Expenses for the men were defrayed by the Mennonite Central Committee.

The Goshen Relief Training School lasted only until August 14, 1943, since adverse legislation by Congress made it impractical to plan foreign relief service for conscientious objectors.

INDIANA CENTRAL COLLEGEIndianapolis*

Indiana Central College participated in two war training programs. Throughout both programs the administrative direction on the part of the college was supplied by the regular administrative officers. These are listed below:

| Name        | Position             |

ALLISON ENGINE SCHOOL

In May, 1942, Indiana Central College was approached by representatives of the Allison Division of the General Motors Corporation and the Army Air Forces relative to providing dormitory housing, mess, and laboratory space for a detachment of air force personnel, until barracks and class room space then under construction at the local Allison Plant and Stout Field could be completed.

An agreement was made by which the institution undertook to provide these services for 200 AAF student mechanics. There was no formal contract nor was any instructional personnel provided by the college. Under this arrangement a group of 200 trainees lived at the college from June 9 to October 15, 1942, at which time it withdrew to its permanent quarters.

19th COLLEGE TRAINING DETACHMENT (AIRCREW)

The college entered into a contract with the Army Air Forces under which it undertook to provide instruction, barracks, mess, and other facilities to candidates for pilot training while such trainees were awaiting admission to pre-flight schools. The full course of study was of five months duration and included the following subjects: mathematics, physics, geography, history, English, medical aid, and civil air regulations. Under terms of the contract, the Army Air Forces agreed to pay for the use of college properties and to reimburse the college for the cost of instruction, housing, and mess for the trainees.

This training unit was in operation from March 1 to July 31, 1943. A total of 730 enlisted men were in training during that period. Administration on the part of the college was in charge of the officials mentioned above.

INDIANA STATE TEACHERS COLLEGE

Terre Haute

The approach of war induced careful planning on the part of administrative and teaching staffs at Indiana State Teachers College, with the object of providing a maximum use of the institution's facilities for the advancement of the war effort. Many faculty and students committees were chosen to direct specific activities. Of these, the principal group was the War Cabinet, consisting of members of the administrative council and the faculty advisory committee, which served as the final co-ordinating and administrative agency of the college in all of its war activities. Another important group was the War Emergency Planning Committee, which served as a clearing house for war planning from various sources and then made recommendations to the War Cabinet. This committee evolved and promoted a plan for exchange of students in the western hemisphere which eventually was incorporated into UNESCO.

MILITARY PROGRAMS

In its effort to co-operate to the fullest extent with the armed services, the college offered six different types of military training programs.

(1) The earliest of these was a Civilian Pilot Training course, started in the fall of 1939, with the college furnishing ground school work and the Paul Cox Airport supplying the necessary flight training. After Pearl Harbor, this course became War Training Service and concentrated upon the production of Army reserve pilots. Later on, Navy reservists joined the program and eventually the Army trainees were withdrawn.

(2) On July 7, 1942, the WTS program was transformed into Navy V-5 school. Trainees were brought into active service and placed in uniform under command of resident naval officers. Billeting, mess, instruction, and recreational facilities were furnished by the college under contract with the U. S. Navy. This program trained 450 cadets before it terminated on July 20, 1944.

(3) A majority of the men students entered one of the four reservists programs (Army, Army Air Corps, Navy V-7, and Marine) soon after war was declared. They continued with their regular studies, making some preparation for their future officers' training in addition, until called to active duty. To this group might be added the men in pre-medical training.

(4) In July, 1943, a Navy V-12 unit came aboard the campus. Three hundred and eighty trainees, consisting of reservists transferred from V-5 and V-7, selected fleet men, and newly inducted men admitted by examination, pursued a set course of naval training combined with academic subjects designed to produce officers. These men were under control of their own officers but instruction, housing, mess, recreation, and academic counseling were furnished by the college under contract. The V-12 program came to an end in October, 1945, after the withdrawal of the last of the 2000 officer candidates who had received training at Indiana State Teachers College.

(5) Correspondence courses in regular academic subjects were offered through the Army Institute for the enlisted personnel in the various branches of the armed forces.

(6) Dr. Paul D. Wilkinson, professor of chemistry, instructed nurses from the two local training centers in science. This program was in effect from 1942 to 1945.

INDIANA TECHNICAL COLLEGE

Fort Wayne

Students at Indiana Technical College, who were usually deferred by their draft boards as necessary men in engineering training during the early months of the war, were drawn rapidly into the ranks of the armed services in 1944. The college tried to prepare these young men for technical careers in the Army and Navy by offering preliminary courses such as pre-radar and pre-test refresher courses for aircrewmembers and meteorologists, pre-pilot training, and Civil Air Patrol ground school. Its principal contribution, however, was a series of contracts with the Civil Aeronautics Administration for CPT and WTS flight school. These began in 1939, at the inauguration of the program, and consisted of both elementary and secondary instruction. In 1942, the CPT program was changed to a War Training Service, full-time Army phase, for enlisted men, with 190 service men enrolled. Messing, housing, transportation, and ground school instruction were furnished by the college in this phase of the program, and flight instruction was given at the Fort Wayne Municipal Airport by the Pierce Flying Service and the Inter-City Flying Service.

INDIANA UNIVERSITY

Bloomington

With the entrance of the United States into World War II, Indiana University expanded its services to the state and the nation; as new needs and demands growing out of the war arose, the University took steps to meet them.

This developing program followed the Indiana University War Service Plan, formulated by the University's Administrative War Council, composed of the regular Administrative Council members, augmented by others called in to represent certain groups and divisions. The Plan in its final form was adopted by the Council on January 14, 1942, received the unanimous vote of the Faculty on the following day, and was approved by the Board of Trustees on January 16, 1942.

The Plan had two purposes. First, it provided ways and means for accelerating the progress of students to meet the nation's demand for trained men and women and to permit students to receive the greatest possible amount of training prior to induction into military service or to participation in the total war effort. Second, the Plan provided for all adjustments of curricula consistent with maintenance of educational standards and use of available resources.

The Administrative War Council was organized on January 6, 1942; it held its last meeting on May 9, 1945.

OFFICE OF MILITARY INFORMATION

The Office of Military Information was instituted to advise students, their parents, the faculty, and the public generally as to selective service requirements, military service regulations, and other war service opportunities. It also channeled officer procurement for the several services and made requests for deferments to local Selective Service Boards.

WAR SERVICE PROGRAM

As Indiana University plunged more deeply into an infinite variety of war services, the original informal control of the various programs by regular administrative officials had to be replaced by a specially designed and centralized War Services Administration. It was the responsibility of the Co-ordinator of the War Service Program to keep in constant touch with burgeoning developments and to supervise especially the University's services to the armed forces.

Indiana University negotiated more than thirty contracts with the United States Army, Navy, and various civilian agencies for the use of its teaching, housing, and research facilities. The general fulfillment of these contracts was co-ordinated by the War Service Program office. The Treasurer's office was responsible for the business details involved in the housing and messing provisions of these contracts.

THE ARMY PROGRAMS

Indiana University's co-operation with the United States Army was of long standing. Its R.O.T.C. unit had been carried on continuously since shortly after World War I and had resulted in the commissioning of approximately 1,000 officers for the Army. Until October, 1943, the Army programs which came to the campus other than R.O.T.C. itself, such as the various Army Reserve programs, the War Training Service for pilots which succeeded Civilian Pilot Training, and the Army Specialized Training Units were logically placed under the military command of the R.O.T.C. officers.

After October, 1943, R.O.T.C. became inactive on the campus and all Army personnel were organized into the 1551st Service Command Unit, composed of seven companies and administered as nearly as possible in orthodox Army fashion. The 1551st Unit remained on the campus until after the end of the war, when the R.O.T.C. was reactivated.

RESERVE OFFICERS TRAINING CORPS

Prior to 1941, the University R.O.T.C. had consisted of basic and advanced infantry and medical units. With our entry into the war, added emphasis was placed on the basic courses which were extended to include the third semester, and a quartermaster unit was added to the advanced courses.

A Women's Auxiliary Training Corps (WATC), the first in the United States, was instituted in September, 1942, on an optional basis. The Corps provided basic and advanced work which was designed to prepare women students for entry into the WAC.

The Department of Military Science and Tactics also took charge of administering the Civilian Pilot Training program, the Army Enlisted Reserve Corps programs and the Medical Administrative Corps program for the University. The latter program provided for the commissioning of eligible medical and dental students in the Medical Administrative Corps of the Army while they continued their regular professional courses. Under the seven enlisted reserve programs which had been established on the campus by the end of 1942 the Army similarly offered a continuation of college training to men of superior qualifications in order to reserve a pool of officer candidates.

CIVILIAN PILOT TRAINING PROGRAM

A CPT program was begun at Indiana University in the fall of 1939 and the first class finished its course in the following spring. Inadequate airport facilities prevented a continuation of the program until the spring of 1941, when it was resumed and carried on regularly until the CAA curtailed its training program in August, 1943.

The original courses in ground school and elementary flight training, designed to increase the pool of civilian pilots, gave way, in 1942, to the War Training Service program in which the trainees were enlisted personnel spending their full time in the program. These trainees at Indiana University were assigned to pre-glider training, power phase. The CPT-WTS program came to an end on the Bloomington campus in April, 1943, by which time one hundred and forty-five students had received training. Actual flight instruction was provided by the Bloomington Flying Service in co-operation with the University.

In September, 1942, the South Bend-Mishawaka Extension Center took over a WTS contract from a South Bend flying school and continued to offer training until August, 1943. One hundred and sixty-five students received this training from the Center in co-operation with the Indiana Air Service, Inc. and the Stockert Flying Service.

ARMY SPECIALIZED TRAINING PROGRAM

The Army Specialized Training Program was established at the University in June, 1943. Initial units were composed of soldiers assigned to advanced Area and Language studies and to Basic Engineering courses in physics, mathematics, history, and other fields. The Area and Language courses dealt with the Balkan area (later changed to Eastern European area) and Germany. All Army personnel assigned to these programs were placed under the command of the Professor of Military Science and Tactics. Instruction was provided by members of the faculty and living facilities by the University.

Students in the Schools of Medicine and Dentistry, subject to military service, were activated in June, 1943, and assigned for military purposes to the ASTP. This phase of the program is described under the section devoted to those schools. Seventeen-year-old reservists and some advanced R.O.T.C. units were also assigned to AST for a time.

At the height of its activity on the Bloomington campus, the ASTP enrolled 2,200 cadets and required the services of 174 teachers. Nearly 8,000 cadets took some training in the program and approximately a tenth of them finished the required course of study on the campus. In the spring of 1944, the Basic Phase program terminated abruptly with the cancellation of contracts and the assignment of trainees to other service. The Area and Language students remained until September.

RUSSIAN LANGUAGE PROGRAM

By contract with the Military Intelligence Division, this work began May 14, 1945, and was completed October 16, 1945. The 220 trainees were given 44 hours of language drill per week and 5 hours of physical education. They were handled as AST cadets.

THE NAVY PROGRAM

Qualified students at Indiana University were permitted to enlist in one of several US Navy Reserve programs which permitted continuation in a regular course of studies with certain specified subjects added. Naval reservists were subject to immediate call to active duty but were under no particular military discipline on the campus. The Naval Reserve programs at Indiana University were—

V-1 for freshmen and sophomores who might later enter other reserve programs:

V-5 for juniors and seniors, preparatory to naval aviation:

V-7 for juniors and seniors, preparatory to becoming deck officers:

SC-V(P) a special program leading to commissions in Naval Intelligence:

H-V(P) a special program for Naval Supply Corps. Medical and dental students were enlisted in this program.

In addition to these was the Marine Corps Reserve program.

In July, 1942, a Naval Training School for yeomen opened on the campus. The sailors were quartered and messed in the Men's Residence Halls and taught in University classrooms by the faculty, but were under the control of their own officers. The school curriculum later changed to include yeomen training for WAVES (Women's Auxiliary Volunteer Emergency Service) and a course for Navy Storekeepers. Finally the entire program changed to storekeeper's training for enlisted personnel of the WAVES, SPARS (Women's Reserve of the Coast Guard Reserve), and Marine Corps Women's Reserve. By the time the school closed on May 29, 1944, training had been given to 5,008 men and women. Of the 1,199 men, 589 were yeomen, and 610 storekeepers. Of the 3,809 women, 3,429 were WAVES, 309 were MARINES, and 71 were SPARS.

UNITED STATES ARMED FORCES INSTITUTE

The contract for Army Institute covered an exploratory program under the supervision of the Extension Division. Work was done on the Bloomington campus during the period from May 25 to December 31, 1942.

In December, 1941, Walton S. Bittner, Associate Director of the Extension Division of Indiana University, became one of the original group helping to initiate the Institute project, which had as its objective the preparation and administration of correspondence courses for the military. At first it was established as the Army Institute with headquarters staff at Madison, Wisconsin (under the War Department Morale Services in Washington). It later became the United States Armed Forces Institute (USAFI), expanded to include the Navy, Marines and Coast Guard. It developed under the Joint Army and Navy Committee on Welfare and Recreation, of which Professor Fowler V. Harper (on leave of absence from the Indiana University School of Law, 1942-44) was chairman, and later expanded under the direction of the Advisory Committee on the Armed Forces Institute, of which Professor Bittner was a member. The program at Indiana University was concerned solely with the preparation of material for the Institute.

ENGINEERING, SCIENCE AND MANAGEMENT DEFENSE TRAINING

The Engineering, Science, and Management Defense Training program was inaugurated to provide short courses of college level designed to meet the shortage of engineers, chemists, physicists, and production supervisors in fields essential to the national defense. Indiana University specialized in the training of production supervisors, and also trained a number of persons in the field of chemistry under this program. Courses were given in 69 different cities and towns by 270 instructors. Total enrollment was 19,023.

NATIONAL WAR PRODUCTION TRAINING PROGRAM

In addition to the various Army, Navy, and defense training programs previously listed, all of which were directly controlled by the Co-ordinator of the War Service Program, the University entered into a variety of contracts for special wartime services which were administered as independent projects. The earliest of these was a contract for the special vocational education of selected defense workers covering the period from January, 1941 to July, 1943. These trainees, destined to become instructors in the War Training Program,<sup>4</sup> were given intensive courses in blue print reading, pattern making, aircraft woodworking, machine tool operation, and radio transmission and maintenance. The maximum length of each course was 225 clock hours and the average daily enrollment during the training period was seventy-six.

NURSING EDUCATION

The Nursing Education Division of the School of Education received funds from the United States Public Health Service for the training of graduate registered nurses for teaching and supervisory positions. An acute shortage of personnel in these essential posts developed as nurses were drawn off into the armed services and Red Cross overseas work. The means developed by the Nursing Education Division to meet this problem were accelerated courses on the campus, extension courses in other communities, workshops and clinics on specific problems and advisory services. A total of 705 students were enrolled in the campus and field courses of this program.

INTER-AMERICAN CONFERENCE

Supported by grants from the Office of the Co-ordinator of Inter-American Affairs, the University undertook a program of activities which was designed to foster friendly relations among the American nations and to form close cultural ties between the people of Indiana and of Latin America. An Inter-American Conference was held in Bloomington in 1943, but travel restrictions during the remainder of the war necessitated the administration of the program in the various extension centers of the state. Student and faculty exchanges, the addition of new courses of study and the dissemination of information by means of lectures and films were other devices used in this program. The Faculty Committee on Inter-American Affairs administered the funds.

WAR INFORMATION SERVICE

At the solicitation of the United States Office of Education, President Wells secured the organization, on the Bloomington campus, of a Committee on Civilian Morale, shortly after Pearl Harbor. He was also asked to head a committee of Indiana college presidents, which established college committees on civilian morale throughout the state. War Information Centers, through which the government could disseminate genuine war news, pictures, and films in order to offset enemy propaganda and defeatist rumors, were established at Indiana, Purdue, and Notre Dame Universities. At Indiana, the Committee on Civilian Morale ultimately proliferated into a number of sub-committees, each charged with a specific kind of informational activity.

RESEARCH PROGRAMS

Indiana University signed seven contracts with the United States government for the use of its laboratory facilities and research staffs in the study of scientific problems created by the crises of war. Dr. Ralph E. Cleland, head of the Botany Department, served as the general agent, supervisor, and liaison man between the University and government agencies which wanted investigative work done.

DEPARTMENT OF CHEMISTRY

The staff and facilities of the Department of Chemistry were utilized by the Office of Scientific Research and Development (OSRD) for investigations on certain chemical problems. The department co-operated with the National Defense Research Committee and with the Committee for Medical Research in carrying out investigations assigned to these agencies by various divisions of the Army and Navy. Work on the four OSRD contracts was performed by certain members of the staff, together with their assistants, who are listed below.

DEPARTMENT OF PHYSICS

Contracts with the OSRD and with the War Department Area Engineers covered special work to be completed with the Physics Department's cyclotron, during the period from August 1, 1942 to March 31, 1944. Experiments with the absorption of neutrons by uranium atoms, which aided in the development of the atomic bomb, were conducted.<sup>6</sup>

DEPARTMENT OF PHYSIOLOGY

Under a contract between Indiana University and the Committee on Medical Research of the OSRD, in effect during the period May 15, 1943 to October 31, 1945, Dr. Sid Robinson and his assistants made studies of the physiological effects of hot environments on men. These investigations were undertaken to answer specific questions of the Office of the Quartermaster General, the Army Air Forces, and the Chemical Warfare Service.

The men used as physiological subjects in the laboratory studies were conscientious objectors assigned to the project by the National Selective Service System and the Brethren Service Committee. A number of field studies were made, in collaboration with U. S. Army personnel, in the semitropical jungles of Florida and Georgia. Subjects in the field studies were U. S. Army soldiers.

SCHOOLS OF MEDICINE AND DENTISTRY

The heavy demands of the armed services for physicians, dentists, and nurses brought the war more closely home to the Medical and Dental Schools than to any other part of the University. Their losses of faculty personnel and of non-professional employees were disproportionately high. Their student enrollment, on the other hand, actually increased. From the beginning of selective service, medical and dental students were deferred by their draft boards. Both the Army and the Navy soon developed reserve programs through which these students were permitted to continue their regular courses. Finally, in June, 1943, nearly all pre-medical, medical, pre-dental, and dental students were inducted into the armed forces, those destined for the Army being included within the ASTP and the naval reservists going into the parallel H-V(P) classification. All these remained in school until their regular course of training was finished and then went immediately into active duty. By means of the accelerated program, the School of Medicine was able to furnish 570 graduate physicians to the armed forces during the war years.

Instruction for these programs was, of course, furnished by the regular faculties of the medical and dental schools. In addition to their heavy load of teaching, faculty members were called upon for particular services to the State Department of Public Health, the Red Cross, the Office of Civilian Defense, and the Surgeon General's office. As the war came to an end, the demands of the Veterans Administration for medical services carried the wartime pressures upon the professional schools into the post-war period.

TRAINING SCHOOL FOR NURSES

Under the terms of the Bolton Act, which established the United States Cadet Nurse Corps, the Indiana University Training School for Nurses signed a contract for an accelerated program of nursing education in which the Federal Government paid specified items of expense. Cadet nurses, enrolled in this course, had to meet all entrance requirements including a physical examination and, in the judgment of the Director, had to be available, upon graduation, for military service, or for essential civilian positions for the duration of the war.

During the operation of this program, from July 1, 1943 to October 15, 1945, the Training School produced 256 graduate nurses and gave partial training to 136 more student nurses.

GENERAL HOSPITAL No. 32

Following the precedent established in World War I, when the University Medical Center had organized the Lilly Base Hospital No. 32, a General hospital staff of 57 officers, 100 nurses, 3 dieticians, 2 physiotherapists, 5 Red Cross workers, and 500 enlisted men was recruited, to a great degree from the Medical Center, for World War II. The unit was commissioned on May 13, 1942, at Indianapolis, trained at Camp Bowie, Texas, and moved to England in 1943. It proceeded to France shortly after the invasion of Normandy and in February, 1945, settled in Aachen, the only major American medical installation to operate in Germany until after V-E day. More than 72,000 patients were treated in the hospital at various locations during its twenty-five months of operation.

The University's war activities, in addition to those listed above, were many and varied. They included:

War production training courses for civilian workers at the University's extension centers in East Chicago, South Bend, Fort Wayne, Indianapolis, and Jeffersonville, and classes in other cities of the state;

Intensive training in office skills, such as shorthand, typewriting, and office management, to meet the needs of government agencies and industry for trained clerical workers;

Expansion of research, some under contract with government agencies, dealing with war needs;

Introduction of the study of cryptology for use in government service;

Assistance to the state's war industry centers, such as Charlestown, Kingsbury, and Burns City, in planning for enlarged school facilities and local governmental functions;

Introduction of the training of physiotherapy technicians to meet the needs of the armed forces;

Addition to the curriculum of courses in Portuguese;

Assistance to the State Defense Council in arrangement of various programs;

Promotion of the sale of war stamps and bonds by faculty and students;

The granting of leaves to staff and faculty members to enter the armed services, governmental agencies, and war production plants.

MANCHESTER COLLEGENorth Manchester*

For ten weeks between June 7 and August 13, 1943, Manchester College provided a training school for 74 conscientious objectors who expected to be sent to China for relief work. As in the similar cases at Earlham and Goshen, the men were assigned to this special work by Selective Service and their expenses were partially paid by the National Board for Religious Objectors. The unit operated as an integral part of the summer school at Manchester, with the regular administration and faculty performing the major services for the trainees. The men were reassigned in August because of Congressional action against providing relief training for conscientious objectors.<sup>8</sup>

PURDUE UNIVERSITY

West Lafayette

Since World War II was mainly a war of technicians and specialists, Purdue University, with its excellent resources for scientific and technological education in time of peace, provided a reservoir of exceptionally valuable manpower in wartime. In the uncertain months before Pearl Harbor, the University entered into a program of training men for national defense. When war came, the University rapidly set about organizing its facilities to render maximum service to the nation, both as a training school and as a center of research.

The switch of reconversion was thrown on December 26, 1941. An Executive Committee of the Faculty decided that, for the duration, the University would operate on an accelerated teaching schedule of three sixteen-week terms a year instead of the two semesters of eighteen weeks and a summer session of nine weeks, as was the custom in peace time. While the revised schedule was in force, no final examinations were given and vacation periods were cut to a minimum. This required changes in teaching and administrative procedures to which all readily adjusted.

The Board of Trustees, on June 13, 1942, granted Dr. Edward C. Elliott, President of the University, a leave of absence in order to enable him to serve on the War Manpower Commission. To handle university affairs in his absence, the Board appointed an Administrative Committee.<sup>9</sup> Dr. Elliott retired on July 1, 1945, and Dr. Andrey A. Potter served as Acting President until December 31, 1945, when Dr. Frederick L. Hovde assumed the presidency.

CENTRALIZATION AND SUPERVISION OF TRAINING

As Purdue University's war program grew more complex, special executive and administrative committees were established to facilitate progress, prevent overlapping, and maintain academic standards. All instruction in the Army and Navy programs was handled by the University and centralized in the office of Andrey A. Potter, Dean of Engineering. Dean Potter's office was charged with achieving effective and economical operation of the instructional programs.

Regular University officers became administrators of training programs carried out according to government contracts. Research contracts were similarly placed under the supervision of heads of the departments in which the projects were to be carried on.

The Purdue Policy-Making Committee co-ordinated plans for Army and Navy training in order to prevent conflicts.

WARTIME TRAINING AND EDUCATION

More than twenty wartime training programs of widely different types were held on the Purdue campus. Those employing the airport were under the general supervision of Grove Webster, manager of the Purdue Aeronautics Corporation. Dean Willard A. Knapp, assisted by Charles C. Albright, had charge of the academic portion of the general instructional programs for the armed forces. The more technical training schools were placed under the supervision of Professor Charles W. Beese, Head of the Department of General Engineering.

RESERVE OFFICERS TRAINING CORPS

Purdue's peace time record of military training is the most effective demonstration of its potential value for national defense. The R.O.T.C. unit at Purdue for years had been the largest field artillery unit in the United States, producing, up until 1940, nearly one-sixth of the Field Artillery Reserve Officers in the Army of the United States. All physically fit male students at Purdue were required to take a course in basic military training and volunteers could continue with advanced courses. This training fitted men all the more readily for useful roles in the new army.

During the war years, the quota of R.O.T.C. officer candidates from Purdue, fixed by the War Department, was raised to 556, and an Ordnance Unit was established in the advanced course. When all students in advanced courses had departed for officer candidate schools, field artillery training was discontinued in March, 1944. A cadet system was set up in the basic R.O.T.C. course, which became "branch immaterial." In May, 1944, and again in June, 1945, the Corps received its customary rating of "Excellent."

NAVY COLLEGE TRAINING PROGRAM (V-12)<sup>11</sup>

The Navy College Training Program was designed to create a pool of trained officers from which to staff units of the rapidly growing fleet. At Purdue it opened on July 5, 1943, under Commander H. J. Bartley with an enrollment of 1,263 men, two-thirds sailors and one-third marines. In all, about 2,730 men took training in V-12 at Purdue, and about 400 were graduated with bachelor's degrees.

The Schools of Engineering adopted the navy program of study, conducting terms 16 weeks in length. Examinations given near the end of each term determined whether trainees would receive further specialized training in deck, supply, or engineering curricula. At the termination of their stay at Purdue, the men were sent to midshipmen's schools, usually for three months, and were commissioned on successful completion of their training there.

Soon after V-J Day, the Navy revised its program at Purdue University to provide for the establishment of the Naval Reserve Officers Training Corps. As the name suggests, the new unit was created for the purpose of awarding reserve commissions after completion of a four-year course, including a program of naval subjects taught by naval officers stationed at Purdue. Upon successful conclusion of these studies, students in the program received the degree, Bachelor of Naval Science and Tactics.

ARMY SPECIALIZED TRAINING PROGRAM

At Purdue, the Army Specialized Training Program (ASTP) began on March 8, 1943, with the activation of the 1545th Service Unit. The first contract called for the housing, messing, and training of 500 advanced engineer trainees. Later, plans were made for the training of 125 in a course in personnel psychology, and of 750 in basic engineering. As it developed, enrollments for four successive terms were 107, 922, 1,348, and 1,189, the last two figures including a small number of reserves. Except for the reserves, the trainees were selected from young men already in the Army.

In the three twelve-week terms of the basic course, the Army men took English, mathematics, chemistry, physics, history, and geography. Those in the three advanced terms took engineering and the higher mathematics necessary for engineering. Course content was stipulated by the Army. Trainees were subject to Army discipline, but regular faculty members provided instruction. Living facilities were furnished by the University.

A series of some 23 ASTP examinations was constructed and statistically evaluated by Drs. Hermann H. Remmers and Kenneth S. Davenport of the Division of Educational Reference.

On March 31, 1944, ASTP was discontinued and trainees were sent to various Army camps and posts. Further Army training was carried on

V-12 AND ASTP INSTRUCTORS

The majority of the instructors listed below were regular members of the faculty who taught both V-12 and ASTP courses. Those who taught in only one program are appropriately designated. Names are listed according to the highest academic rank held prior to 1946, except for departmental chairmen, whose names are placed at the head of each list.

NAVAL TRAINING SCHOOL FOR ELECTRICIANS' MATES

This program, begun on June 16, 1942, provided an intensive four months course under navy supervision. With some exceptions, instructors in the school were especially employed for this program and had not previously been members of the University teaching staff. Lieutenant Commander Herbert N. Hart, USNR, was the first commandant.

Laboratories for the school were equipped in the Michael Golden Shops and the Electrical Engineering and Physics Buildings. Much specialized equipment was furnished by the Navy and by private power companies. Trainees studied mathematics and electrical theory, and took work in the electrical laboratory, the wiring laboratory, and the tool laboratory. Before closing on June 30, 1945, the school trained approximately 6,500 sailors. More than half of these men were assigned to advanced schools for additional training in such naval functions as convoy duty, mine warfare, and amphibious operations. In the closing months of the program, all graduates were assigned directly to the fleet.

SCHOOL FOR WAC PERSONNEL ADMINISTRATION

The War Department chose Purdue as a site for this school, which opened on April 17, 1945. Students were WAC officers, ranging in rank from second lieutenant to colonel, assigned to duty involving administration of WAC enlisted personnel. The groups included company and staff officers, inspectors, and recruiters from various Army commands in the United States and overseas.

One purpose of the school was to allow the officers to pool new personnel techniques acquired in actual experience. Emphasis also fell on principles of adult psychology and preparation for the processes of demobilization and readjustment.

Training doctrine and curricula were directly controlled by the War Department General Staff, Office of the Director, WAC. Administration was through Army Service Forces, Fifth Service Command, 1545th Service Command Unit. In addition to an administrative staff, four WAC officers were assigned as temporary faculty for each class. To these was added a small group of regular Purdue faculty members.

Nine classes, the last ending on October 15, 1945, accommodated the 818 WAC officers who attended the school.

FLIGHT TRAINING

Flight training existed at Purdue before the war, in a program inaugurated by the Civil Aeronautics Administration and carried on with growing momentum at the Purdue University Airport. By June 30, 1942, more than 500 students had been graduated from seven different types of flight training programs.

As a wartime center for the training of military flyers, the Airport trained 28 pilots from the Army Enlisted Reserve Corps, 534 from the Navy V-5, and 166 from the War Training Service flight instructors school. At the peak of operations, the field had about 60 planes, 40 civilian instructors and an equal number of ground personnel.

The facilities of the airport were later turned to the training of men from eight South and Central American countries in airline and fixed base operations. About 85 completed ten months of training.

THE DIESEL ENGINEER OFFICER TRAINING SCHOOL

In July, 1942, after ten-day notice, the Navy sent 25 warrant officers to the campus for a course in the operation of diesel engines. Other groups followed until the school closed in February, 1943, after training about 200 officers. The School of Mechanical and Aeronautical Engineering was responsible for most of the instruction and course content, which was patterned after a brief Navy Department outline. Five ensigns trained in similar courses were sent to Purdue as laboratory instructors. After leaving the school, the officers were sent on active sea-duty.

AIR CORPS SQUADRON ENGINEERING OFFICERS

In January, 1941, the first of two groups of officers began a three-month course in engineering as applied to aircraft maintenance. Under the direction of the School of Mechanical and Aeronautical Engineering, about 100 received training. This type of training ceased at Purdue after facilities had been prepared at various Army schools, and the Purdue school's records were transferred to Chanute Field.

WAR TRAINING FOR INDUSTRY

In the period of emergency before the war, plans were created to supply training to a rapidly expanded force of industrial workers. Three successive, federally-financed, college level training programs, administered under the guidance of the U.S. Office of Education, spanned the war years: Engineering Defense Training (EDT), Engineering-Science-Management Defense Training (ESMDT), and Engineering-Science-Management War Training (ESMWT). Dean Andrey A. Potter, as Chairman of the National Advisory Committee, War Training for Industry, developed these three programs, which trained more than one and a half million persons. Purdue University was outstanding among institutions which participated in this activity. In more than 100 Indiana towns and cities, Purdue organized and directed training for about 60,000 students in approximately 2,660 classes.

Most of the training took place in the industrial centers. Classes were held in high schools, college buildings, and war plants. In the critical years when plants were swinging into war production, more than 44,000 workers were trained. By June, 1943, about 800 instructors, assistants, and laboratory teachers had been employed. Almost 90% of the course outlines used were prepared by specialists on the Purdue campus.

The three main fields of instruction, as the title of the program indicated, were engineering, science, and management. These were divided into sub-fields and finally into individual courses, in which the accent was placed on practicality and the object was to place a trained man in the office, laboratory, shop, or production line in the shortest possible time.

OTHER WAR TRAINING ON THE CAMPUS

The War Department Civilian Defense School. Five types of courses were given on the campus under the auspices of the Office for Civilian Defense. Representatives came to these courses from the Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, and Ninth OCD national regions and from Winnipeg, Canada. Between the opening date—June 14, 1942, and the closing date—June 25, 1943, the OCD schools were attended by 1,265 persons.

Ultra-High Frequency Techniques. Approximately 300 persons received pre-radar training in ultra-high frequency techniques in a course first offered under the ESMDT-ESMWT program and later continued as part of the regular curriculum in the School of Electrical Engineering.

The Chemistry of Powder and Explosives. Training in this field was urgently needed at the outset of conversion to defense production in order to instruct laboratory and supervisory workers in commercial methods of handling, testing, and manufacturing munitions and explosives. Training began in June, 1941, and about 80 persons received instruction at Purdue.

Ordnance Inspection. These classes, which began in March, 1942, and ended in November of the same year, trained approximately 120 specialists for work in the Cincinnati Ordnance District and the Victory Ordnance Plant at Decatur, Illinois.

Engineering Aides for Wright Field. A 24-week course trained sixty boys hired through Civil Service to be engineering aides at Wright Field, Dayton, Ohio. Later, 100 young women, in several groups, were trained for the same purpose. The School of Electrical Engineering was largely responsible for instruction and course material.

Quality Control. Mass production—frequently of precision instruments by hitherto unskilled workmen—required mass testing. Special statistical methods devised during the war went far toward solving the problem of efficient testing. A one-week school held at Purdue, in the spring of 1944, was effective in spreading knowledge of the new methods, and was attended by 90 men from various educational and industrial organizations.

Curtiss-Wright Cadettes. Purdue University was one of seven schools selected by the Curtiss-Wright Corporation to train young women for engineering duties and responsibilities normally assigned to graduate engineers. The curriculum was developed jointly by representatives of the Corporation and the seven schools. When the last Cadettes left in March, 1945, the total who had received training was 258.

RCA Cadettes. The Radio Corporation of America also chose Purdue University to train women for work in its war plants—replacing men in armed service. In the RCA program, 137 Cadettes received certificates and departed for jobs in various plants of the Corporation. RCA and Curtiss-Wright paid for these programs and also paid the young women a nominal salary.

RESEARCH IN SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY

ENGINEERING EXPERIMENT STATION

In accordance with its charter purpose—service to industry—the Engineering Experiment Station in peace time undertakes problems ranging from testing of minor items to major research. In the war years, the Station co-operated with the armed forces, with war industries, with governmental agencies such as the National Defense Research Committee, and with the Purdue Research Foundation.

DEPARTMENT OF RESEARCH RELATIONS WITH INDUSTRY and THE PURDUE RESEARCH FOUNDATION

The Foundation and the Department served to determine what research needed to be done and where it could be done on the campus; then played the indispensable role of contracting with an external agency for the support of that research. In this way provisions were made for laboratories, equipment, and raw materials; graduate students were supported on their way to advanced degrees; new productive leaders were developed; and the University's creative scholars were given an outlet for their talents as teachers and research workers. Twenty-three contracts were made by the Foundation with various federal agencies for essential war research.

DEPARTMENT OF BIOLOGY

In co-operation with the Food Subsistence Laboratory of the Quartermaster Corps, U.S. Army, and the Agricultural Experiment Station, the Department of Biology conducted studies to learn what part, if any, bacteria played in the development of off-flavors in stored dry eggs. The principal technical result of these studies was establishment of a method by which reliable counts could be made of bacteria in the processed eggs.

The Department also conducted investigations of conditions simulating those encountered by pilots in high-altitude flying.

Assistant Professor of Bacteriology

DEPARTMENT OF CHEMISTRY

Five Foundation Fellowships supported the Chemistry Department's research for the War Department, the U. S. Naval Research Laboratory, and the Office of Scientific Research and Development, while a number of industries—including DuPont, Hooker Electric Chemical Company, General Tire, and Eli Lilly—came to the Department for assistance in the solution of wartime problems. The number of fellows and professors engaged in research of military significance increased from 27 to 60 between January, 1942, and September, 1943. The Department worked on a process for recovering uranium from waste liquids, on coolants for the atomic bomb process, on explosives, synthetic rubber, hydraulic fluids, and anti-malarials.

DEPARTMENT OF PHYSICS

During the war the staff of the Department of Physics was divided into three major groups. One went to the Radiation Laboratory of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology to participate in the rapid development of military radar. Another engaged in atomic research at Los Alamos, New Mexico, while the third remained on the campus to do research and carry a vastly increased teaching load. Other individuals served in various plants and laboratories away from the campus. Four Foundation fellowships were assigned to the Physics Department on contracts with the War Department, OEM, and WPB. One of these provided for research with the Department's cyclotron in the atomic energy program. Under another, Purdue physicists perfected a new material, germanium, to replace silicon crystals in microwave radar.

SCHOOL OF CIVIL ENGINEERING

War research projects of many sorts were carried on by the members of this school in its Materials Testing Laboratory and in the Joint Highway Research Department, maintained by the school and the Indiana State Highway Commission.

Under contracts with the Civil Aeronautics Administration, the Joint Highway Research Department investigated various types of stabilizing materials for airport runway construction and developed procedures for evaluating soils and rocks by means of aerial photographs. A national soil map grew out of this study.

Field observations of stabilizing materials, aerial studies of permafrost, surveys for Camp Atterbury, and calculations of the effect of reduced speeds on the highways were also undertaken by the Department.

SCHOOL OF CHEMICAL AND METALLURGICAL ENGINEERING

The school accepted three contracts from the War Production Board and two from the National Research Council, as well as several research projects in co-operation with various industries. This work involved improvements in welding processes, wartime substitutes for vital products, the development of anti-mold chemicals, and the recovery of useful materials from garbage. Members of the department also participated in atomic bomb research, the training of inspectors for explosive plants, the manufacture of rare chemicals in large amounts for use in the Arctic and tropical regions, the manufacture of a war gas, the designing of pilot plants for new processes, and advisory services to private industrial firms with government contracts.

SCHOOL OF ELECTRICAL ENGINEERING

Research in the School of Electrical Engineering was concerned primarily with improvements in wartime communications. Some of the major projects dealt with radio-controlled target aircraft, a system for determining the location and velocity of airplanes, blind flying, micro-waves, precipitation of static on aircraft, magnetic tape transmission, secret speech transmission, and steel wire as a substitute for copper in transmission lines. One project was carried on by the Aircraft Radio Laboratory under contract with the War Department and four others under Foundation Fellowships for the Office of Emergency Management.

SCHOOL OF MECHANICAL AND AERONAUTICAL ENGINEERING

Nineteen contracts with government agencies were carried out by this school in research on artillery, ammunition, aircraft engines, jet propulsion, heat transfer and various aeronautical developments. These may be summarized briefly as follows: for the War Department, two Purdue Research Foundation Fellowships; for the War Department (Ordnance), Springfield Armory Project, Machine Gun Development; for the Army Service Forces, three Artillery Development Projects, Machine Gun Mounts Development; for the Army Air Corps, nine projects; for the Office of Emergency Management, one Purdue Research Foundation Fellowship; for the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, one Purdue Research Foundation Fellowship. Important among the heat transfer projects were studies on the cooling of aircraft engines done in co-operation with the Air Materiel Command at Wright Field, and research on the cooling of guns in rapid fire, performed for the Ordnance Department. The Ordnance Distinguished Service Award was granted for the machine gun research program.

SCHOOL OF PHARMACY

The School of Pharmacy trained men and women for service as technicians in the armed forces as well as in first aid and X-ray techniques. Several research projects, concerned with such fields as the standardization of drug products and the experimental cultivation of medicinal plants, were undertaken. The most important was an extensive development of a new antimalarial compound which is still being investigated.

AGRICULTURE

Agriculture at Purdue is under three main divisions: (1) the School of Agriculture, responsible primarily for teaching and training; (2) the Agricultural Experiment Station, which conducts constant research in agricultural problems and new scientific methods; (3) the Department of Agricultural Extension, through which the University's facilities for teaching and research are carried throughout the state to the individual farmers. Each of these divisions played an important role in the war effort.

In spite of the many factors which reduced enrollment by more than 90%, the School of Agriculture continued for the duration to be probably the largest agricultural school in the nation, and the only one to participate in ASTP and V-12 programs.<sup>15</sup> Customary short courses and training conferences were continued, and the staff was active in providing essential information by radio, press, and public meetings.

The Agricultural Experiment Station continued its manifold experiments in every conceivable phase of agriculture, animal industry, and forestry, adapting such of its activities as were capable of it to the special needs of wartime. One noteworthy contribution was the Farm Labor Simplification Program, advertised widely over the state, by which the efficiency of farm practises was greatly increased. A similar simplification of dairy collection routes resulted in saving both milk and gasoline. The results of years of experimental work by the Station were evidenced in the tremendous production goals reached by Indiana farmers to meet the demands of war.

The Department of Agricultural Extension was the principal agent in carrying the government's war needs and the methods by which they could be met to Indiana's farmers. Its work was closely integrated with the USDA's Food Production Administration, the Indiana State War Board, the county agricultural war boards, and such farmer's organizations as the Farm Bureau and the 4-H Clubs.<sup>16</sup>

Each of the thirteen specialized departments, which constitute the School of Agriculture and work through the other two divisions, made its own contribution to victory. The Agronomy Department studied the production of rubber from guayule and co-operated with the USDA in campaigns to increase production of cereal crops. The Dairy Department inspected butter for use by the government and established new standards for a usable product. The Forestry Department conducted experimental drying of walnut gunstocks. Agricultural Chemistry staff members engaged in five research projects concerned with the general problem of improving the flavor and attractiveness of dehydrated foods. New varieties of plants were developed, fertilizers standardized, animal diseases eradicated, improved feeding supplements discovered, and innumerable improvements made in farm machinery and equipment.

Purdue University carried out a number of other activities directly or indirectly promoting the war effort. Among them:

The Department of Engineering Extension carried the benefits of engineering teaching and research to persons and industries throughout the state by means of short courses, conferences, and conventions.

The Public Safety Institute performed similar services in fire, police, and safety security training for war industry personnel.

The School of Home Economics gave Canteen Corps courses to Red Cross workers and assisted in adapting the restricted available food-stuffs to the needs of the school lunch rooms, industrial cafeterias, and home kitchens.

The Division of Education and Applied Psychology perfected tests for aviation cadets, improved flight instruction techniques, developed tests of skills and abilities for industrial workers, and assisted in conducting industrial training schools.

The Division of Educational Reference helped devise, administer, and score admission tests for Army and Navy specialist training programs. Students and faculty promoted war bond and stamp drives.

The University granted hundreds of leaves for military and civilian war service to faculty members.

The Bureau of Information promoted and publicized most vital war activities undertaken by the University, except those kept secret for reasons of security.

ROSE POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE

Terre Haute

Although the engineering students at Rose were deferred by their draft boards as a matter of national policy during the early months of the war, the student body became much depleted by enlistments and by the induction of nearly all physically fit men in 1944. The college tried to meet this problem by providing almost continuous instruction and by offering its facilities to the government for military training units. The Reserve Officers Training Corps, which had operated successfully at Rose since after World War I, was considerably expanded. In June, 1943, the 1554th Unit of the Army Specialized Training program for Army engineers was established on the campus. To this unit were assigned 250 trainees, half of them in the Basic Engineering course, the remaining, advanced half in two sections of Mechanical, one section of Electrical and one of Civil Engineering. The college was responsible for housing, feeding, instruction, and physical training. Part of the men were billeted in a dormitory but the majority occupied rooms in the downtown Deming Hotel and were transported to the campus.

After the AST program was discontinued in April, 1944, an Air Corps Reserve class of 90 boys, under eighteen years of age, was allotted to Rose. This group remained until December, 1944. Altogether more than 400 Army men received some training at the Institute.

Rose Polytechnic was also one of the three Indiana colleges qualified to give courses in engineering under the U. S. Office of Education's Engineering, Management, & Science Defense Training program.<sup>17</sup> Dr. Donald B. Prentice, President of Rose, was appointed regional ESMDT adviser for Region 14, which included Indiana. More than 2,000 workers were trained in classes which were held in Terre Haute, Linton, Sullivan, and Indianapolis.

SAINT FRANCIS COLLEGE

Fort Wayne

Saint Francis College for women, which was located in Lafayette until 1944, cooperated with the St. Elizabeth School of Nursing in providing training, under the Bolton Act, leading to enrollment in the U. S. Cadet Nurse Corps. This program began at St. Elizabeth in 1941, and continued beyond the war. Federal funds provided for all expenses of the student nurses while they attended the school during the three years of basic training. Seventy-four nurses were graduated in the four classes which began their training during the war period.

TRI-STATE COLLEGEAngola*

Tri-State College was one of the Indiana institutions which signed contracts with the Civil Aeronautics Administration for a Civilian Pilot Training program which, in due time, was changed to full-time War Training Service. Trainees in WTS at Tri-State belonged to the Army Air Corps Reserve. The college furnished housing, mess, and ground school instruction, while the flight training was carried on at the Angola Air Port. During the WTS period, lasting until July 1, 1943, between twenty and forty cadets were constantly in training.

UNIVERSITY OF NOTRE DAME

Notre Dame

War came to Notre Dame in her centennial year, and plans for a Centenary celebration were laid aside in deference to the more insistent demands of the nation. Once again large numbers of Notre Dame men went into the armed services, and priests of the Congregation of Holy Cross became chaplains under the familiar direction of the Most Reverend John J. O'Hara, C.S.C., Auxiliary Bishop of the Army and Navy Diocese of the United States, himself a former president of Notre Dame. The faculty was depleted by calls from the armed services and from Washington for special duty, but staff members who remained on the campus gladly met the unusual demands placed upon them by the war program.

For the duration, Notre Dame adopted a three-semester program and reduced her pre-law requirements in order to offer as much education as possible prior to military service. Her laboratories and research facilities were placed at the disposal of the government, and her campus was offered for the use of military training units. The administration of these projects was a primary responsibility of the regular staff, but a Committee on War Activities was appointed to co-ordinate and correlate Notre Dame's many war projects.

NAVAL RESERVE OFFICERS TRAINING CORPS

Notre Dame's N.R.O.T.C. was established on the campus in the summer of 1941. Peak enrollment, in November, 1945, was 808. These men occupied special quarters and were under command of naval reserve officers, but part of their instruction was provided by the regular faculty. The University established a Department of Naval Science and Tactics under authority of the National Defense Act. The staff of this department provided professional training for students of N.R.O.T.C. and V-12.

NAVAL COLLEGE TRAINING PROGRAM
V-12

Eight hundred Marine privates and 1,050 apprentice seamen began training under the V-12 program at Notre Dame in July, 1943. Trainees took the Basic Naval course with emphasis on mathematics and physics, or continued with their regular academic program, if they were upper-classmen. Most of the instruction in this program was provided by the regular faculty of the University in the regular classrooms.<sup>20</sup> The program continued until the spring semester of 1946.

CIVILIAN PILOT TRAINING PROGRAM

The Civilian Pilot Training Program, offered by Notre Dame under the Civil Aeronautics Administration, started on the campus, June 16, 1940, and closed in the spring of 1943. During that time, 52 classes, comprising 349 students, were taught by 14 instructors. The University was responsible for the ground instruction, while Indiana Air Service and Stockert Flying Service taught the flying to the trainees. Of the

349 students, 11 were high school teachers, 60 were Navy V-5 trainees, 19 were Army trainees, 10 were non-college trainees, while the rest were students at the University.

WAR TRAINING COURSES

War Training Courses, sponsored by the U. S. Office of Education, were conducted by the University of Notre Dame from December, 1940 through June, 1945, for the benefit of war industries in the St. Joseph Valley area. This program, entirely financed by the government, provided for the teaching, on the college level, of potential instructors and managers in industrial training programs. Classes were held evenings on the campus and in various industrial plants in South Bend, Mishawaka, Elkhart, and LaPorte.

A total of 271 classes, of which 171 were engineering, 24 science, and 76 management courses, were taught by Notre Dame faculty members and competent men of industry. A total of 8,751 employees were enrolled in the classes, of which number 7,862 were men and 889 were women. Sixty-four percent of the total number of registrants actually completed their training. From September, 1942, until June, 1945, the ESMWT courses were open to both men and women.

RESEARCH PROJECTS

During the war, Notre Dame scientists were engaged in a number of research projects, both on the campus and at other research centers. The Bacteriological Laboratories studied certain problems connected with public health and welfare throughout the war, under contracts with the Federal Security Agency and, later, the Chemical Warfare Service. A project was carried on by the Department of Aeronautical Engineering, under the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics. In the Department of Chemistry, anti-malarial research was conducted for the Office of Scientific Research and Development. The OSRD also contracted for research on gun steels in the Department of Metallurgy. The Physics Department participated in two research projects. One was an investigation of the physical properties of rubber and rubber-like materials, carried on under the Rubber Reserve Company. The other was a part of the vast atomic energy program, conducted first under the auspices of the OSRD, and later of the Manhattan District Project. The men engaged in these various research tasks served for the duration of the war.

VINCENNES UNIVERSITYVincennes*

Vincennes University, a junior college, met the demands of wartime by adopting an accelerated three-semester calendar and by facilitating the enlistment of college men into one of the seven reserve corps programs for officer training. During the year 1943-1944, members of the college faculty gave instruction in languages to cadets at George Field under Army Special Services. Vincennes' most direct contribution was a contract with the Civil Aeronautics Administration for a Civilian Pilot Training course which ultimately became War Training Service. After July, 1942, Vincennes University trained, housed, and fed five groups of enlisted service pilot cadets, one group for the Navy, and four for the Army. Ground school instruction was provided by the college faculty and flight training by the O'Neal Flying Service.

WABASH COLLEGE

Crawfordsville

Wabash College, a men's school, lost ninety-seven percent of its civilian student body, as well as a third of its faculty, to the armed forces. This abnormal situation was partially offset by the establishment of a Navy V-12 training program on the campus. The curriculum was altered, the schedule streamlined, the budget adjusted to unfamiliar conditions, and the normal pace of life on the campus changed to meet the demands of war.

The Navy V-12 unit existed on the Wabash campus from July, 1943 to November, 1945. During these twenty-eight months, 677 trainees from 28 states were assigned to the unit and 520 completed the designated courses of training. Under the contract with the Navy, the college furnished instruction, housing, and food, and acted as the Navy's agent in procuring classroom supplies and laundry service. The men were housed in dormitories and fraternity houses and fed in a newly-established mess room in Peck Hall. New laboratories and classrooms had to be equipped for the naval classes and seventeen temporary instructors added to the faculty. At the end of the program, Wabash College was cited by the Secretary of the Navy for its "effective co-operation . . . in the training of officer candidates."

TRAINING OF INDUSTRIAL WAR WORKERS

It was obvious, almost from the beginning of the European conflict, that the most serious educational problem of a nation engaged in total war was the training of an adequate number of industrial workers. As early as May 27, 1940, John W. Studebaker, Commissioner of Education in the Federal Security Agency, called a conference of the nation's vocational education leaders to meet in Washington. Out of this session grew plans for the Defense Training Program, sponsored by the National Defense Advisory Commission. The general structure of this program was outlined by the U. S. Office of Education but its immediate administration was turned over to the vocational training branches of the state departments of education. Special appropriations were allocated by Congress to the U. S. Office of Education for the financial support of the program.

Under the leadership of Harvey G. McComb, state supervisor of industrial education, the defense training program got under way in Indiana in July, 1940. Special afternoon and evening classes were organized in sixty-six public school centers throughout the state for instruction in blue-print reading, riveting, welding, machine operation, radio repair, and other shop practices. The original emphasis was placed upon short, pre-employment training courses to renew the skills of formerly trained workers or to teach elementary machine operation to unskilled laborers. The majority of the earliest trainees were not employed by private industry and 50 percent of them, at least, were supposed to be drawn from WPA rolls. They were registered with the State Employment Service for placement after their training was completed.

After Pearl Harbor, the urgency of the war production training program greatly increased. Emphasis shifted strongly from pre-employment training to supplementary courses which would increase the skill of those already employed, and to on-the-job training which made rapid upgrading possible in war industries. Courses were also designed particularly for out-of-school youth and rural youth. The National Youth Administration, the Civilian Conservation Corps, and the Works Projects Administration developed definite training programs in co-operation with or supplementary to the industrial education provided by the schools. At least ten other federal agencies offered educational opportunities in specialized fields, while Y.M.C.A.'s, business colleges, and private schools of every sort directed their efforts particularly toward meeting the demands of war industry. Indiana more than matched her industrial production record with an adequate labor-training program, ranking sixth among the states in the number of trainees per thousand population. At the end of the war, more than 240,000 men and women had received training in Indiana—a number four times greater than the total trained by the entire nation during World War I.

In 1943, the War Production Training program was brought under the supervision of the Training Division of the War Manpower Commission.<sup>1</sup> Using more than 200 separate facilities, 90 of which were in the public schools, this program employed most of the vocational teachers in Indiana and kept the training shops operating on a "round the clock" schedule. Local advisory committees composed of industrial and production experts were extremely active in advising school authorities and WMC officials. WMC's Training Division encompassed War Production Training, the Training Within Industry program, the Apprentice Training Service, and the Engineering, Science and Management War Training program.

TRAINING WITHIN INDUSTRY PROGRAM

A Training Within Industry Section was established in the Office of Production Management, late in 1941, and continued after January 24, 1942, in the Labor Division of the War Production Board. At this stage, its principal function was to advise employers who wished to establish TWI programs in their own factories, and to train instructors. In 1943, TWI was transferred to the War Manpower Commission and began to specialize in the training of foremen and group leaders. Job Instruction Training Institutes were held to instruct trainees in the teaching of elementary shop practice. New job methods were taught in twenty Job Methods Institutes, and the more efficient integration of industrial processes in the total war effort was stressed in the Job Relations program. More than 65,000 ten-hour certificates were issued to trainees who completed these courses.

APPRENTICE TRAINING SERVICE

Inaugurated several years before the war, this agency was transferred to WMC in September, 1942, and returned to the Labor Department in 1945. It set the standards for an accelerated apprenticeship training in essential crafts and trades. Although the need for highly skilled workmen was greater than ever during the war, apprentice training was seriously hampered by shortages of manpower and material. It became very important in the post-war period, especially to veterans.

ENGINEERING, SCIENCE AND MANAGEMENT WAR TRAINING

This service provided advanced, intensive courses of training in management and research techniques for selected employees of war production plants all over the state. The courses were taught under the auspices of colleges and universities, whose services in this connection are detailed elsewhere.<sup>2</sup>

NATIONAL YOUTH ADMINISTRATION

The NYA, established in 1935 to provide work training for unemployed youth and part-time employment for needy students, was transferred to the Federal Security Agency from the Works Progress Administration in 1939, and again on September 17, 1942, to the War Manpower Commission, where it functioned within the Bureau of Training. From the early months of the defense period, this agency turned its facilities readily to preparation for war. Financial support which enabled trainees in industrial classes to remain in the high schools and colleges was useful, but the agency's principal contribution was in the conversion of its entire out-of-school work program to training for war industries. Concentrating its efforts in the thirteen most highly industrialized counties in the state, and especially in its five residence centers, where full-time training could be provided, NYA produced machinists, welders, aircraft fabricators, patternmakers, machine operators, nurse's aides and airport mechanics. More than three thousand young people were supported in these training programs before NYA was liquidated in July, 1943.

The National Youth Administration was a highly decentralized agency, functioning locally through a state youth administration and voluntary advisory committees. The state was divided, originally into seven and later into three areas, each with a director who was generally responsible for the projects carried on within the counties assigned to him. The number of these projects decreased from a high of 161 in 1940, to 20 in 1943.

WPA TRAINING PROGRAMS

The close connection between the earlier Defense Industrial Training program and the Work Projects Administration has already been mentioned. During the first year's operation of this project, nearly 4,000 Indiana WPA workers were trained, without loss of salary, in 53 vocational schools throughout the state. In July, 1941, a new Training and Re-employment Division was organized within WPA to increase the agency's contribution of available manpower to the war effort. This division remained active until early in 1943, when WPA was liquidated.

Besides co-operating with the War Production Board and the state vocational education department in providing the standard mechanical, metal-working, and technical courses for pre-employment trainees, the Training and Re-employment Division also organized an active in-plant training program which proved particularly successful. In the latter part of 1940, WPA and the Civil Aeronautics Administration joined in organizing special training courses for airport service men. These were held at four selected centers in Indiana. The Training and Re-employment Division also sponsored training programs for non-professional hospital workers, household workers, and for a wide variety of vocations in which unemployed teachers could be used as instructors.

PART FOUR
SERVICES TO THE ARMED FORCES

Americans were determined, more than they had been during any previous war in our history, that the citizens called upon to fight their country's battles should endure no more of the hardships and discomforts of war than necessity demanded. World War II witnessed a tremendous outpouring of voluntary services for the men and women in uniform.

Much of this effort was spontaneous and unrecorded. Much of it, on the other hand, was highly and efficiently organized. New organizations, such as the Victory Book Collection, joined with such familiar agencies as the Red Cross to carry on an extensive program, while the United Service Organizations launched a co-operative venture, vastly improved over the uncorrelated efforts of World War I.

The following section presents as much of this great volunteer war service as the preserved records reveal. Unfortunately, much of it will never be known.

AMERICAN RED CROSS

By the terms of its charter, granted by Congress in 1905, the American Red Cross is obligated "to furnish volunteer aid to the sick and wounded of armies in time of war . . . to act in matters of voluntary relief and in accord with the military and naval authorities as a medium of communication between the people of the United States of America and their Army and Navy . . . to continue and carry on a system of national and international relief in time of peace and apply the same in mitigating the sufferings caused by pestilence, famine, fire, floods, and other great national calamities, and to devise and carry on measures for preventing the same."<sup>1</sup>

The national Red Cross organization met these responsibilities by a great variety of services to the men and women in uniform, centering particularly in hospitals, recreation centers and field headquarters. Unusual contributions were the development of the blood donor project and the protection of prisoners of war. Maintaining the supply of nurses for the armed forces became one of the main responsibilities of the Nursing Service. The Home Service helped servicemen and their families to meet the problems which arose from enforced separation. The volunteer workers of the Canteen Corps fed troops in transit, while those of the Motor Corps sometimes provided the transportation itself. This enumeration could go on at some length, but the workers of the Production Corps, who produced nearly 52,000,000 surgical dressings in Indiana during a three-year period and other articles in like proportion, should not go unmentioned. In the meantime, what might be called the normal activities of the Red Cross, consisting of its numerous services to civilians, went on at an accelerated pace.

The fundamental unit of Red Cross activity is the local chapter, of which there are 102 in Indiana. The Indiana chapters are affiliated with the national organization through the Eastern Area regional headquarters at Alexandria, Virginia. Since November, 1943, the Eastern Area includes Indiana, Virginia, the District of Columbia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio and Kentucky.

It is unfortunate that the limitations of space prevent listing the names of the thousands of Hoosier volunteer workers who served in the Red Cross during the war years. Some measure of the impossibility of doing so may be gained from a simple figure: the total number of hours served in the Volunteer Special Services alone during the three-year period, 1942-1944, was 14,267,611.<sup>2</sup> In the following pages are listed only the individuals who were responsible for directing this gigantic activity.

CAMP AND HOSPITAL COUNCILS

One hundred and eighty Red Cross councils, composed of volunteers, organized local resources to provide equipment, furnishings, and service activities for the able-bodied and patients at 635 Army and Navy stations in the United States. Central Indiana composed one of these councils and other parts of the state went into three more. They served ten military installations.

BLOOD DONOR SERVICE

This project was inaugurated in February, 1941, at the request of the Army and Navy, and developed into the largest controlled undertaking in medical history. During the two year period after June 30, 1942, 195,548 pints of blood were collected at the Indiana centers. The Indiana counties participating in the blood donor service are grouped below under the cities with which they co-operated.

UNITED SERVICE ORGANIZATIONS

The crowding of men into military camps and of families into the vicinity of defense plants during the late months of 1940 brought on a serious recreation problem in many American communities. The original solution for this problem was that employed in World War I—spontaneous and uncoordinated effort by a variety of interested organizations. As early as February, 1941, the armed forces asked the Federal Security Agency for help in providing a more adequate recreational program for the men in camp. As a result, the United Service Organizations was incorporated for the purpose of providing comfort, relaxation, and recreation for men and women in the armed services, during their off-duty hours. The six member agencies which pooled their efforts in the warborn organization were the

The first problem faced by the national USO was the raising of sufficient funds to begin its work. For this purpose, regional, state, and local offices were organized as rapidly as possible. The state organization for Indiana was launched at a meeting in the Capitol on May 8, 1941, and USO committees were organized in virtually every Indiana community for fund-raising purposes. After these committees had conducted the first two annual campaigns, they merged with or were replaced by the sales forces of the Indiana War Fund,<sup>1</sup> although several of the larger communities combined all war fund appeals with their regular Community Chest drives. In many places, the original USO committees eventually became USO Councils with supervisory and advisory control over local servicemen's centers. The USO State Executive Committee remained in existence throughout the history of the organization and resumed responsibility for USO financial campaigns after Indiana War Fund, Inc. was disbanded in 1946.

USO CLUBS AND SERVICEMEN'S CENTERS

Local servicemen's centers and clubs had been started in many parts of Indiana before USO was organized. Some of these affiliated with USO after May, 1941, while others remained independent throughout their history. National USO organized a number of clubs directly, particularly in small towns near the great ordnance plants and military reservations. Some seventy centers with special facilities for servicemen were ultimately operating in Indiana with almost every possible degree of affiliation with USO from complete dependence to complete separation.

In the following roster, such information as could be obtained is given for each of these seventy operations, regardless of its relationship to USO. For the sake of simplicity, these facilities are listed in the alphabetical order of the cities in which they existed.

ANDERSON

A community-conducted servicemen's club at the corner of Ninth and Central was in operation from sometime before September, 1943, until after April, 1945. J. L. Watts was chairman of the club. (No further information available.)

BEDFORD

The Servicemen's Center in Bedford, which opened on March 1, 1943, and closed on January 1, 1946, was maintained entirely by the community with no financial aid from USO. Civic organizations, clubs, merchants, and individuals cooperated in supporting its widespread activities. Except for one paid hostess, all service in the club was voluntary. Servicemen from Camp Atterbury, Freeman Field, Crane and Indiana University patronized the Club.

BLOOMINGTON

The need for providing a recreation center for members of service units in training at Indiana University and service personnel from Crane Naval Depot prompted the organization, in the fall of 1942, of a Board of Directors to supervise such a project. This group, which acted in lieu of a USO Council, made plans which culminated in opening the Monroe County Service Center on the east side of the Bloomington square on October 27, 1942. Funds were received from the regional office of the USO in February, 1943, and after this date the local unit was designated USO Monroe County Service Center. In February, 1944, the Center was moved to the Field Building on Fourth Street, which was the site until officially inactivated April 15, 1946.

Mrs. Kathryn L. Fagan served as director during the entire period the Center was in operation. Attendance of servicemen and women was recorded as being 943,312. There were 734 junior and senior hostesses. Money donated by Bloomington and Monroe County totaled $41,347; USO grants totaled $39,750.

CHARLESTOWN

The original USO Council for Clark County was organized January 28, 1942. USO workers were authorized three weeks later. Joint operation by NCCS-Women's Division and the YWCA was succeeded eventually by NCCS-WD alone. The USO-NCCS Club in Charlestown opened June 23, 1942; attendance totaled 44,151 during 1944; volunteer workers averaged 87 per month in 1943. The Charlestown club opened an extension in the Pleasant Ridge Housing Project, May 12, 1943, which served 48,397 persons during 1944, with 14 volunteer workers on an average per month. Ninety percent of the patrons of these clubs were war production workers.

COLUMBUS

The USO Areal Council for the Camp Atterbury region was formed in May, 1942, with all member agencies participating. Transfers and reductions left the local club eventually a joint agency operation in which NCCS was directing agency, JWB and YWCA assisting agencies. A Servicemen's Club opened in Columbus in July, 1942; the USO Club opened on November 9, 1942. Attendance for 1943 was 168,322 with an average of 297 volunteer workers per month.

EDINBURG

The Edinburg club operated under the USO Council for the Camp Atterbury region<sup>2</sup> with the local Board of Management acting as a community council. The YMCA was designated as operating agency in May, 1942, and the club opened on August 5, serving military personnel. Attendance during 1944 was well over 90,000. One hundred volunteers per month served during 1943.

ELKHART

A General USO Committee was appointed June 26, 1942, at the initiative of the Elkhart County USO Chairman. Representatives of the USO participating agencies and of other civic groups constituted this committee, which had general supervision of USO activities in Elkhart. An Activities Subcommittee promoted the use of the YMCA building as USO headquarters and arranged with the local War Mothers to inaugurate a train-meeting service which provided entertainment for servicemen spending a lay-over period in the station. Other community entertainments in the homes and public halls were sponsored. All work in this center was voluntary and supported by local funds.

USO CLUB

At various times, USO maintained five different centers in Evansville. For the principal one, the USO Club, the Salvation Army was designated as the operating agency on June 10, 1942. A "Drop-in Center" was established November 7, 1942, and maintained until eight months after the club building at Eighth and Main was opened on February 12, 1943. A JWB area worker was added to the staff September 8, 1942. During 1944, the Club entertained 438,884 patrons, chiefly from Camp Breckinridge. An average of 1,246 volunteer workers per month carried on its activities.

FORT WAYNE

A "Wayne Hospitality Committee," formed within the USO fund-raising organization, sponsored the establishment of a lounge and information center late in 1941. The club room was managed by a "Committee of Five." A formal USO Council was created in December, 1942, and a club building opened on June 19, 1943. An average of 969 volunteers per month served an actual total of 212,141 service men and women during the year 1944. The Club was a community council operation, affiliated with the USO but supported by the Fort Wayne United War Chest. A Board of Directors composed of two representatives from each of the five agencies and two from the general public was selected from the USO Council to supervise the Club.

On September 5, 1943, a Troops-in-Transit Lounge was opened under the general direction of the USO Council. It received a grant-in-aid from NTAA in 1944.

FRANKLIN

Two USO centers were located in Franklin under the supervision of the USO council. A club which had started as a community project was assigned to Salvation Army direction on August 5, 1942, on transfer from the Atterbury area USO Council. This club maintained a roster of 43 Senior Hostesses, 124 Junior Hostesses and 244 workers from Johnson County. Attendance during 1944 was 88,486, consisting principally of military personnel from Camp Atterbury.

FRENCH LICK SPRINGS

A community-conducted servicemen's center operated for a short time between 1943 and 1945. (No further information available.)

GREENCASTLE

Two USO centers were opened in Greencastle on March 7, 1943, for the recreational use of Navy V-5 and V-12 units on the DePauw University campus. They were affiliated with USO but operated by a community council. Both were closed in September, 1944, when the V-5 program was terminated.

HAMMOND

Following the recommendations of a survey committee which had been selected by the local USO fund drive officials, the Service Men's Center of Hammond was incorporated in December, 1942. The Hammond Lions Club underwrote the financial support of the venture and a board of nine members, four of whom were selected by the Lions Club, became the governing body. A long list of patriotic, professional, religious, service, fraternal, labor, and civic organizations pledged their support to the Center and enabled it to operate effectively without external support of any kind.

The Drop-In Center was opened on January 21, 1943, and remained in operation until the end of 1946. A great variety of recreational and hospitality services was offered to the 22,000 servicemen who patronized the center. One hundred Senior Hostesses and an equal number of Junior Hostesses headed the large number of volunteers who carried on the center's program.

INDIANAPOLIS

As the induction center for the Fifth Corps Area (Indiana, Kentucky, Ohio, West Virginia), Indianapolis was familiar with the plight of the lonely soldier long before the nation as a whole became aware of the problem. As operations at Fort Benjamin Harrison were enlarged, Camp Atterbury founded, training units opened at the Naval Armory and neighboring colleges, activity increased at Stout Field, and a ceaseless stream of men in uniform began to flow through the Union Station, Indianapolis' hospitality was subjected to a severe test. Rallying to the crisis through civic agencies, religious organizations, service and social clubs, commercial firms, and individual effort, the citizens of the community supported no less than nineteen centers at which servicemen and women could find some kind of free entertainment.

For the most part, this was a community enterprise, antedating in its origin the establishment of USO and depending upon the national organization thereafter only for a degree of financial support. The five principal operations were maintained by Indianapolis Service Men's Centers, Inc., which was organized solely for the solution of this social problem. The remaining centers were maintained by churches, religious organizations, and fraternal societies, employing their own facilities and providing their own support, and the local representatives of the constituent agencies in USO, who were supported by the United War and Community Fund. Close co-operation was maintained with case work agencies. Volunteer hours were filed with the Office of Civilian Defense.

USO COUNCIL

The Indianapolis USO Council served as the link between these varied activities in the Hoosier capital and the national USO, obtaining from local contributions to USO drives and United War Fund campaigns a substantial sum, which remained in the community for the support of the Indianapolis work, and co-ordinating the tremendously manifold activities which were carried on there for the benefit of the servicemen. Beginning simply as the executive committee of the USO fund-raising organization in 1941, it was set apart as the Indianapolis Citizens Committee of USO in February, 1942, and finally became the USO Council in June of that same year. It remained in active and highly successful operation until the end of 1946, drawing an ex officio membership from many civic organizations and from the armed forces, in addition to the representatives of the USO's constituent agencies.

INDIANAPOLIS SERVICE MEN'S CENTERS, INC.

The first center in Indianapolis, opened on May 22, 1941, was the Army, Navy and Marine Service Club on Wabash Street, which was subsidized by the Indianapolis Board of Park Commissioners and staffed by WPA. The old freight depot was rented from Indianapolis Railways for one dollar a year. On September 1st, Mrs. Dorothy F. Buschmann became Director of the Club. Mayor Reginald H. Sullivan appointed a Community Committee for Servicemen which first met on September 24, 1941:

| Allan Bloom                | Lt. Elmer Schubert      |

In order to achieve the maximum benefit of USO and Park Board funds in carrying the increasing load of operation, the Mayor's Committee appointed a Committee on Management, consisting of representatives from all interested groups:

Under this organization, rapid growth necessitated the opening of the Union Station Canteen, the Senate Avenue Branch for Negro servicemen and the Illinois Street Branch within less than a year. On July 24, 1942, the entire project was reorganized and incorporated as "Indianapolis Service Men's Centers". A Board of twelve Directors—two appointed by the Park Board, two by the USO, two by the United War and Community Fund, and six from the community at large—was created to assume legal responsibilities and to concern itself with policies and finances:

A unique part of the organization was the Men's Governing Committee, composed of servicemen and women who helped to fit the program to the needs and desires of their comrades, and to govern their conduct in the buildings. John Reid, of the Finance School, was elected Permanent Chairman of the Committee which grew to a membership of forty.

A Planning Committee, made up of Heads of the Centers, Chairmen of projects, Special Service Officers from the surrounding installations, and representative citizens, was formed September 11, 1942, to plan for the activities and programs requested by the Men's Governing Committee, and to co-operate with the various military installations in filling their many needs:

Completing the subsidiaries of the Indianapolis Service Men's Centers, Inc., in its final form were the Pantry Shelf, which originated at the Army, Navy and Marine Service Club and was formally incorporated separately for reasons of bookkeeping, and the Roberts Park Church Center, which became affiliated with the I.S.M.C. in 1943. The Indianapolis Service Men's Centers, Inc., functioned within this framework until it dissolved on July 1, 1946.

Some conception of the tremendous activity carried on by the Indianapolis Service Men's Centers, may be derived from a few statistics. 5,910,109 members of the armed forces enjoyed the hospitality of the Centers.

1,478,444 individual meals were served to members of the armed forces in the Service Men's Centers.

115,651 dozen cookies were donated to the Centers.

64,316 volunteers served in the Centers.

1,701,613 hours of service were contributed by these volunteers.

The staff which supervised the entire program of activities for Indianapolis Service Men's Centers, Inc., was housed in the Wabash Street Center. Only the Executive Secretary and Bookkeeper were paid employees—all other general staff workers were volunteers.

PUBLIC RELATIONS

A Committee for Publicity and Public Relations was established September 5, 1941, by the Director of Publicity. This Committee kept the community advised of the work and needs of the Centers through the press, radio, and other available avenues, and thereby obtained substantial support, thousands of donations, and homes opened to servicemen. Active contact was maintained by the Director with the Public Relations Departments in each of the camps and training schools in this area.

CADETTIQUETTE STAFF

Cadettiquette, the first Service Men's Club paper in the country, was originated at the Indianapolis Service Men's Center, by Patty Ely, Cadette in Regiment II. Sponsored by Theta Sigma Phi, National Women's Journalism Sorority, the four-page mimeographed paper was distributed in 1942 to visitors at the Indianapolis Center and to military service clubs in the area of Indianapolis. By 1945, 5,000 copies were being issued twice a month and mailed to service men all over the world.

In response to a plea from the Post Morale Officer of Fort Benjamin Harrison, a Post Dance Committee was organized, in January, 1941, by the Volunteer Bureau of the Marion County Community Chest and Council. The committee formulated regulations, recruited the girls who were taken to the post for dances, and acted as chaperones.

With the opening of the Army, Navy, and Marine Service Club, the girls selected by the Post Dance Committee were asked to be hostesses at the regular dances. In October, 1941, four regiments of Cadettes were formally organized. Beginning with sixty girls, each regiment had ultimately to be increased to a maximum membership of 450. The First Regiment was sponsored by the Junior League, the Second by the Pan-Hellenic Alumnae Association, the Third by the American Legion Auxiliary, and the Fourth by the Altrusa Business Women's Club. The commanding officers of each regiment were mature and reliable women and the most responsible Cadettes were chosen as Captains and Lieutenants.

Cadettes were required to meet rigid membership qualifications, to serve a minimum number of hours per tour of duty, and to be governed by a definite set of rules in regard to dress and conduct. A pre-induction training course was given each applicant and a brief probationary period was served before full-fledged membership was granted. Cadettes from the Senate Avenue Branch, the Roberts Park Church Center, the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., and the Kirshbaum USO met the same requirements and took the same training. The S.M.C. Cadettes served a total of 746,432 hours.

LIBERTY BELLES

Many of the girls originally recruited by the Post Dance Committee who were unable to serve the regulated hours of the Cadettes, continued to attend Post Dances after the downtown service club had been opened. In July, 1942, they selected the name "Liberty Belles" and organized into five (later fourteen) divisions, each with approximately one hundred girls, headed by an adult sponsor. A Joint Council, composed of the sponsor and one representative from each division, determined the engagements and assignments for the girls. In every respect except schedule, the Liberty Belles conformed to the same training procedure and regulations as the Cadettes. They attended an average of three dances a week, traveling by bus or other conveyance to the military posts and camps where their services were requested. The Liberty Belles served 351,006 volunteer hours.

THE PANTRY SHELF

The provision of food for Sunday night suppers and special parties for the Armed Forces was started at the Army, Navy and Marine Service Club, in October, 1941, by Dr. and Mrs. Robert Masters and Mr. and Mrs. Tony Foster, who furnished and cooked the food. From March to June of 1942, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel White were Chairmen.

The advantages of separate bookkeeping led to the incorporation of the Pantry Shelf in June, 1942, and in July it moved to larger quarters at the Illinois Street Branch. When the Illinois Street center closed in March, 1946, the Pantry Shelf moved back to the Wabash Street Center until it closed in July, 1946.

Meals were served to 252,129 members of the Armed Forces by volunteers who contributed 27,850 hours of service. No salaried personnel was ever used by the Pantry Shelf.

UNION STATION CANTEEN

The Union Station Canteen opened December 21, 1941, and closed March 31, 1946. Located in the southwest corner of the station concourse, it consisted of a small kitchen, counter, and lounge. The 1,884,107 members of the armed forces who were guests of the Canteen, asked for and got, free of charge, an endless variety of service and refreshment from 1,334 volunteers who contributed a total of 207,247 hours of duty. Thanks to volunteers from the Junior Chamber of Commerce and War Dads, service was given twenty-four hours a day. Chairmen of the

WABASH STREET CENTER

After the opening of additional centers and the incorporation of the Indianapolis Service Men's Centers, the old Army, Navy and Marine Service Club was called simply the Wabash Street Branch. It housed the general staff for I.S.M.C., Inc., the important P.B.X. for all the centers, and a 125-bed dormitory and showers. It was the general information center for uniformed personnel as well as civilians, and became the clearing house for special activities outside as well as inside the centers. Here, donations of all kinds and complimentary tickets for entertainments, sporting and social events were received, distributed and acknowledged.

The second floor offered writing, library, game and check rooms, showers, and a large recreation room furnished by clubs and individuals. When the Illinois Street Center was opened, this floor was restricted to men of the Armed Services.

After the Illinois Street Center was closed in March, 1946, the second floor of the Wabash Street Center was again opened to the recreation activities which had been housed at Illinois Street. This Center was the last of I.S.M.C. to close, on June 6, 1946.

The P.B.X., which required the services of 55 highly trained volunteers, operated four trunks and fourteen stations daily, 8:30 A. M. to midnight, from January, 1942, until June, 1946. Another important service was that rendered by the "Sister Susies," a group of 250 volunteer workers who repaired and pressed uniforms for servicemen and women. Workers were available every night for this service, and they were also kept busy with such special projects as making curtains, drapes, flags, and insignia. Emergency housing was furnished in the Wabash Center for stranded military personnel after V-J Day and for flood refugees. Outside services of many sorts were arranged at Stout Field, the Army War Show Bivouac Area and the Butler Aviation Cadets "Club 52" at the Antlers Hotel. Dances were held in downtown hotels, at the War Memorial and at the Sports Arena.

ILLINOIS STREET BRANCH

Through the generosity of J. P. Frenzel, this branch of the I. S. M. C. was housed in the old Maennerchor Building, which was excellently adapted to recreational purposes. It was formally opened on July 6, 1942 and closed on March 1, 1946. During this period it was open every day and required a staff of 75 volunteers to direct its activities on week-ends. Attendance totaled 580,410, and 137,041 hours of volunteer service were recorded.

A tremendous variety of special projects for the entertainment and comfort of servicemen and women was developed at the Illinois Street center. The nature of these is evident from the list below, but special mention of the volunteer services rendered by organizations of different kinds might help to indicate the breadth and depth of the popular support which the Service Men's Centers, Inc., received from the people of Indianapolis:

The Metropolitan Chapter of Painting and Decorating Contractors of America, using paints donated by 16 firms, did all the decorating for the lower part of the building;

Students and faculty of the John Herron Art Institute painted murals and maintained an art studio for informal instruction;

Officers of the Indianapolis Assembly No. 31, Society of American Magicians, furnished and conducted the Magic Club room;

The Marion County Association of Truck-Tire Dealers supported the "Rogue's Gallery" which sent portraits of service personnel, free of charge, to an indicated address;

Orchestras and individual artists donated their services through the courtesy of the American Federation of Musicians, Local No. 3. The Firestone Stores and the Rost Jewelry Company furnished recordings for the Music Hour. The Music Section of the A.A.U.W. listed homes where service personnel could practice or listen to music, and the Piano Teachers' Association furnished music and magazine subscriptions;

Epsilon Pi Chapter of Delta Theta Tau furnished a popcorn machine and popcorn; Alpha Phi sorority maintained a coffee table; punch and cookies were furnished by the American Legion Auxiliary; and birthday cakes were contributed by the Kingan's Girls Athletic Association and the Navy Club Auxiliary. The Uniben Club and the women of the Maennerchor Society maintained the Cookie Closet;

The Cultural Activities Club of Local 145, Amalgamated Clothing Workers, provided the necessary food and entertainment for the New Year's Eve Parties and Breakfasts. This local also gave annual Christmas parties and furnished curtains for the Wabash Street dormitory;

The steam presser was furnished by the C.I.O. and the shirt-washer, dryer, and ironer by the Bridgeport Brass Company;

American Legion Posts of the Eleventh District staffed the check room and issued soap, towels, razors, etc., which were furnished by the American Legion, the Childhood Education Association, and a group of physicians;

Registration maps and sheets were painted by Shortridge High School and Tudor Hall students;

Secretaries from the State House and the Kingan's Girls Athletic Association furnished the free typing service; Counseling services in the Hermit Room were offered by ministers, rabbis, priests, and one Christian Science practitioner.

Flowers were contributed regularly by the local mortuaries.

"EVENINGS AT HOME"

In the spring of 1944, the Psychologist at Billings General Hospital requested arrangements for home entertainment as a therapeutic treatment for convalescing war-shocked men. A committee from Indianapolis Service Men's Centers, Inc., arranged visits for these men, in which they shared, for a short time, normal family life with civilians.

SENATE AVENUE BRANCH

At the same time that the Park Board made arrangements for the Army, Navy and Marine Service Club, it placed the Northwest Community Center at the service of the Negro servicemen, with the Director in charge of planning activities. A group of civic leaders subsequently sponsored a comprehensive recreational program in Indianapolis, with headquarters at the Northwest Community Center. Volunteer workers in the City-Wide Servicemen's Activities were divided into eighteen operating committees (later increased to twenty-two) which continued to function throughout the war. As the number of Negro servicemen increased, it became necessary to find a large downtown center. Mr. Paul Rathert, Mrs. Thomas D. Sheerin, Mrs. Meredith Nicholson, Jr., Mrs. F. B. Ransom, J. Wallace Hall, and Herman Holiday obtained rental property at 219 Senate Avenue, and in July, the Senate Avenue Branch of the Indianapolis Servicemen's Centers, Inc., was established. The services offered in the Senate Avenue Branch were duplicates of those at Illinois Street, with the addition of space for housing. The Supper Bell cooked and served 24,828 hot meals. Home-made pies and cakes were furnished by the churches, while sororities and civic organizations helped to supply the food.

From the incorporation of the Senate Avenue Branch, on July 24, 1942, until the center closed March 1, 1946, 285,058 members of the armed forces were served by 1,041 volunteers, who registered 92,803 hours of service.

ROBERTS PARK CHURCH SERVICE MEN'S CENTER

This center, opened on July 18, 1942, in the Roberts Park Methodist Church recreation rooms, began as a church project, sponsored by the City Missionary Society and the Women's Society of Christian Service of the Methodist Church. Although it continued to receive strong support from a number of church groups, it joined Indianapolis Service Men's Centers, Inc., on July 18, 1943, and thereafter received two-thirds of its support from I.S.M.C. funds.

This center was open each week-end from Saturday noon until Sunday night, and it maintained a typically wide range of activities, including a popular skating rink. The Corner Cupboard served more than 90,000 free meals of home-cooked food. During the 3½ years, 1,600 women of the churches of Indianapolis and from a few sororities and other organizations, did the cooking and serving of these meals under the direction of Mrs. James G. Haston.

The Register of this center shows that it was visited by representatives of twenty nationalities. One of its most unusual features was the performance of marriage ceremonies in the sanctuary, and subsequent wedding receptions. Miss Frieda Brooks, Chairman of this Committee, assisted 175 couples in planning complete details.

USO SERVICES NOT INCORPORATED IN ISMC, Inc.*NCCS CENTER

The need for wholesome recreational facilities, especially designed for Catholic servicemen, led to the development of two Catholic centers in Indianapolis. Dances and buffet suppers were held periodically in the Knights of Columbus Hall from early in 1942, while other forms of entertainment were offered by various churches and auxiliary organizations. These were all sponsored by an Advisory Committee, representing the principal Catholic organizations. Increasing patronage led to the opening of an NCCS-USO Club in St. John's Hall on December 6, 1942, which offered a wide variety of services, including a dormitory. This center was financed in part by the Community Fund. Nearly 107,000 servicemen patronized the NCCS-USO Club.

From June 1 to December 31, 1946, after all other USO centers in the city had closed, the NCCS center remained in operation under the supervision of the USO Council as the Georgia Street Center. Its closing marked the termination of USO activities in Indianapolis.

KIRSHBAUM CENTER USO—JWB CLUB

An Army and Navy Committee of the Jewish Community Center Association was organized for planning purposes on January 14, 1941. It inaugurated a program of social events and home hospitality for Jewish servicemen prior to the opening of the USO-JWB Club in April, 1942. Although NJWB furnished the original leadership, the Club operated as a community-conducted project after October, 1942, closely co-operating with NJWB and USO. In addition to furnishing all the regular features of a service club, including home-cooked meals served by the Federation of Jewish Womens Clubs and the various Synagogues, the USO-JWB Club offered the free use of athletic facilities at the Kirshbaum Center, administered an elaborate program of home entertainment, and ministered particularly to the religious life of Jewish boys in the Indianapolis area. When the Club closed in April, 1946, it had entertained 150,614 members of the armed forces through more than 89,000 hours of voluntary service.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION

The Indianapolis YMCA began offering special services to National Guardsmen called to active duty in 1940. After USO had been formed and the National Council of the YMCA urged that this work be extended in 1941, a special USO Secretary was employed and the service program expanded tremendously. In addition to the regular facilities of the YMCA which were always open to servicemen, a special lounge was created, a special dormitory fitted out, parties and dances organized, food furnished, and special entertainments provided. Most of this activity was supervised by a Service Men's Committee, under whose direction 160,000 hours of service were given by volunteers from the USA

Chapter of American War Mothers, Epsilon Sigma Alpha sorority, Navy Mother's Club, American Volunteer Service club, and YMCA members. Double YY parties also enlisted the services of organized Cadettes and Liberty Belles.

YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION

The Indianapolis YWCA began its USO work in 1942 with the addition of a USO staff worker. Within a year its USO program was varied and much enlarged. Between January, 1943 and March, 1944, 12,231 persons attended midnight recreational programs for night shift war plant workers. More than one hundred YWCA "Cadettes" were enrolled, trained, and sent to parties and dances, while others served as hostesses in the YWCA building. After the ISMC clubs had closed in

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCHES USO

Under the direction of a committee appointed by the Synod of Indiana, the Presbyterian churches of Indianapolis combined their efforts to support three servicemen's centers. Game and fellowship rooms were made available and free hot lunches served on week ends at the Second Presbyterian Church and at the Fairview Presbyterian Church. A major project of the committee was a Service Men's Center operated in one of the Butler University fraternity houses, which was leased for the duration. Intended primarily for the military students stationed at Butler, this Center was open day and night for recreational activities, food, and fellowship. It also served luncheons and provided temporary housing for persons visiting the Butler cadets. A full-time hostess, Mrs. Helen Stone, was engaged for this Center. The funds for the maintenance of all three projects were provided exclusively by the Presbyterian churches of the city.

KINGSFORD HEIGHTS

The USO Club in this housing center for workers at the Kingsbury Ordnance Plant was first established as an extension of the Knox USO Council's work in December, 1943. After August, 1944, it came under the control of the Walkerton USO. YMCA-Ind., the original sponsoring agency, was then succeeded by NCCS-WD. During 1944, 41,197 people were served by an average of 79 volunteers per month.

KOKOMO

A Service Club which came to be patronized chiefly by men from the Bunker Hill Naval Air Station was opened in Kokomo on June 4, 1941. It remained a community-managed operation throughout its history, with representatives from various civic and fraternal organizations serving as officers. It was financed through the Community Chest. Total attendance, to the time of closing in November, 1945, had been 27,708 and volunteers averaged 25 in number per month. There was no professional staff.

LAFAYETTE

In January, 1942, a Tippecanoe County Service Council, consisting of representatives from churches, clubs, and patriotic organizations, was organized for the purpose of giving "send-off" parties to local inductees. On August 1, this Council dissolved, and Mayor A. R. Killian, of Lafayette, appointed an Executive Board for a local USO. A club was established in the YMCA building, and subsequently was forced to move twice to larger quarters. On September 1, 1943, the club changed from USO to community management, and the Executive Committee was reorganized. More than 125,000 servicemen, mostly from training courses at Purdue University, were entertained during the last two years of the Club's operation, and volunteer services averaged 1,177 per month. The Club was closed on July 1, 1945. Mrs. Walter M. English gave more than 6,500 hours of service as chairman of USO work in Tippecanoe County.

LAPORTE

Extension service, under the sponsorship of YMCA-Ind., began at the Maple Terrace Housing Project in March, 1943. In October, the Knox and Walkerton USO's began operating the center cooperatively; a year later it was made a designated extension of the Knox club. Attendance for the last three months of 1944 was 7,712; volunteer workers averaged 46 per month.

LOGANSPORT

The Logansport USO Council, organized in July, 1942, operated two centers. The USO Club, maintained principally for the benefit of personnel from the Bunker Hill Naval Air Station, was opened on January 16, 1943. Between March and August of 1944, attendance totaled 7,490 and volunteers for the same period averaged 334 per month. The USO Lounge in the Pennsylvania Station opened May 16, 1943, and closed April 10, 1946. More than 10,000 service men and women were served in this period by an average of 100 volunteers per month.

MICHIGAN CITY

The Michigan City Service Men's Center was opened in October, 1942, as a community sponsored project. A board elected by representatives of civic, fraternal, and religious organizations, who had been called together by the mayor, operated and governed the Center. It was supported financially by grants from the Community Chest Fund, and voluntary contributions. The Center existed primarily for the benefit of trainees in a gunner's mate and radio technician's school in the Naval Armory. More than 100 girls served in the Cadette Corps for the entertainment of those men. The Center closed in October, 1945.

PERU

Peru's proximity to the Bunker Hill Naval Air Station led to the organization of a USO Operating Committee in May, 1942. The YMCA was designated as directing agency in June. A lounge was opened late in 1942, and a complete club building on March 4, 1943. In the meantime, the Miami County USO Council had been formed in January. Total attendance for a two year period before the closing of the club on November 21, 1945, was 204,445. Volunteers averaged 325 per month.

RUSHVILLE

A USO Club sponsored by the Junior Chamber of Commerce operated in Rushville for some time in 1943 and 1944. W. Kendall was the chairman. (No further information available.)

SEYMOUR

The USO Council was organized in Seymour on November 30, 1942. Prior to that time a Salvation Army worker had been designated for this area. Nearly 240,000 people enjoyed the USO Club's facilities between the date of its opening on December 12, 1942, and the end of 1944. Volunteer service averaged more than 300 a month.

On January 20, 1943, an extension service for Negroes was authorized and a club was opened early in March. Attendance totaled 83,007 prior to 1945, and volunteers averaged 150 per month. An extension service to Ridgeview Housing Project was designated on October 1, 1944. All Seymour facilities were transferred to a Community Council on February 21, 1945.

SOUTH BEND

The Service Men's Center in South Bend, administered and financed entirely through local efforts, opened in rented rooms April 17, 1942, and moved to a permanent location in August, 1943. It operated principally for the benefit of the navy personnel at the University of Notre Dame. The original, improvised group in charge gave way to a more fixed organization in June, 1943. This consisted of a set of administrative officers, an advisory committee made up of civic leaders from all parts of the community, and the operating personnel, which included a Junior Board. All of these persons served in a voluntary capacity. At the close of the Center in October, 1945, it was reported that 1,820,000 service men, women, and guests had been entertained by some 6,000 volunteer workers over a three year period.

TERRE HAUTE

USO activities in Terre Haute were organized principally for the entertainment of troops in transit, but services were later developed for military personnel stationed at the two colleges<sup>34</sup> and at George Field, and for workers from the Vigo Ordnance plant. Under the supervision of a Troops-in-Transit Committee, a Lounge was opened in the Union Station in November, 1942, and another near the bus station in January, 1943. The first Servicemen's Club was established in the YWCA in March. These varied activities were brought under the control of a regularly elected USO Council in April, 1943, and an NTAA director took charge of the lounges shortly thereafter. Additional recreation centers were provided in St. Stephen's Church and Temple B'Nai Abraham. The YMCA offered dormitory facilities to servicemen, and Negro USO junior hostesses began holding semi-monthly dances for soldiers from George Field in May, 1943. Total attendance at these facilities during 1944 was 27,118; at least 1000 volunteers provided the necessary services.

VALPARAISO

A servicemen's club, of which Ralph C. Bowman was chairman, was in operation in Valparaiso in 1943. (No further information available.)

VINCENNES

Entertainment for servicemen was offered in the Presbyterian Church by a group of local volunteer workers during the latter part of 1942. With the rapid growth of nearby George Field, USO decided to establish a club in Vincennes, with NCCS as the designated operating agency. The club was opened on January 16, 1943, and an extension service club for Negro troops was inaugurated on March 31, 1943. Attendance at the USO Club was 200,390 during 1944, with volunteers serving at the average rate of 314 per month. Attendance at the Negro extension totaled 28,952 during 1944, with 22 volunteers per month at work.

INDIANA WAR FUND, INC.

The Indiana War Fund, Inc., was an agency of the National War Fund, which represented the conscience of America. It was organized early in 1943, to eliminate duplication of effort and multiplicity of appeals by nineteen vitally needed agencies, which were providing essential services to our fighting forces and merchant marine, and relief to our allies and refugee friends. This consolidated effort enabled the beneficiary agencies to obtain their necessary funds in one single, annual campaign.

The organization of the National War Fund was anticipated in Indiana by the Indiana Association of Community Chests and Councils. As a result of the work of a committee of this organization, Indiana War Appeals was incorporated on January 17, 1943. It served as the coordinating link between the National War Fund and the local community organizations which did the actual work of carrying the annual appeal to every individual in the state. Indiana War Fund, Inc., as it finally was called, maintained a state office which served primarily in an advisory capacity, offering consultation service at all times, and sending field representatives throughout the state in campaign periods. Statewide policies were determined by the Board of Directors and carried out in detail by the Executive Committee.

For convenience and efficiency of campaign operations, the state was divided into sixteen districts, each led by a district chairman, who, in turn, appointed county chairmen for each of the counties in his district. More than 75,000 volunteer workers in the 109 campaign units in the state succeeded in raising approximately $17,800,000 in the three campaigns of 1943-1945. Of this amount, $7,281,665.82 was the National War Fund share and some $10,574,000 was used within Indiana for local needs. The corporation was dissolved on March 13, 1947.

CAMPAIGN UNIT CHAIRMEN

The majority of the 109 local campaign units of Indiana War Fund were originally organized by USO, which conducted independent drives in 1941 and 1942. Under Indiana War Fund, these units conducted the combined campaigns of 1943, 1944, and 1945, after which USO made another appeal in 1946-47. Since essentially the same local units performed all of this work, the chairmen are listed below in chronological order for the entire period.

FREE LEGAL ASSISTANCE

The Committee on National Defense of the Indiana State Bar Association was organized in September, 1940. Its name was changed in February, 1942, to Committee on War Work. The Committee consisted of a state chairman, a district chairman in each Congressional District, a county chairman in each county, and several committeemen in the more populous counties.

The Committee was organized as a part of the national program, sponsored by the American Bar Association, to make available to members of the armed forces and their dependents competent legal assistance, and to furnish a place where local Selective Service Boards could send inductees and their dependents who applied for legal assistance. The Committee assisted the State Director of Selective Service in a number of ways, including the selection of qualified members of the Bar to serve as Government Appeal Agents in the Selective Service System. The Committee also agreed to have its members serve as legal advisers for the re-employment committeemen of local draft boards in the solution of the complex problems arising under the re-employment section of the Selective Service law.

In addition to the services rendered by the Committee, local Bar Associations and legal organizations assisted in providing free legal services to service men and their dependents. Among the organizations which rendered this service was the Indianapolis Legal Aid Society, sponsored by the Indianapolis Bar Association. The activities of such local organizations were closely integrated with the work of the Committee of the Indiana State Bar Association.

The Committee on War Work has not been formally dissolved, and still carries on such work as comes to its offices.

VICTORY BOOK COLLECTION

War-related services held first place in the work of Indiana libraries from the moment our country was drawn into the conflict. Foremost among the libraries' contributions directly to the armed forces was their participation in the two great Victory Book Collection campaigns of 1941-42 and 1943. Under the direction of a state chairman, nearly all of the 235 local librarians in the state organized community collecting committees and became the local agents for the reception and distribution to service centers of the gift books. Nearly 200,000 usable volumes were donated to camps, hospitals, and service libraries by Hoosiers through their local libraries.

In addition to their unique function of collecting book donations, the libraries participated in a large variety of other war services. They sold directly more than $2,000,000 worth of war bonds, in addition to participating in a state-wide plan to test the efficacy of library-promoted publicity for war bond sales; they collected Indiana war records on a large scale, in cooperation with the Indiana War History Commission; and they used every possible device and technique to acquaint their patrons with the issues of the war, with the information published by government agencies and with the growing body of war-born literature. Finally, as veterans began returning to civilian life, many libraries established information centers equipped with books and pamphlets designed to help them in the difficult process of readjustment.

PART FIVE

INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION

The most direct contribution which the civilian population of a modern nation is called upon to make to the conduct of war is that of furnishing the weapons without which the soldier, no matter how well selected, trained and conditioned, is helpless. Mechanized warfare, indeed, makes the fighter almost subordinate to his weapons, his transportation, his communications, and his supplies. It is axiomatic that American victory in World War II was a victory of the production line.

The heroes of the production battle were those workers who were more interested in output than in overtime pay and those businessmen who willingly endured regimentation and conversion for the sake of victory rather than profits. Unfortunately, these names have not been recorded. It is the task of this section, rather, to portray the organization and personnel of those agencies—of government, of business, and of labor—which supervised, stimulated, expedited, encouraged, and channeled the magnificent productive energies of Indiana industry in its drive to victory.

OFFICE FOR EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT

The Office for Emergency Management was established in the Executive Office of the President by an administrative order of May 25, 1940.<sup>1</sup> Its functions were to assist the President in the clearance of information with respect to emergency measures and in maintaining liaison between defense agencies. In effect, it became a holding company within which nearly all of the war-time federal agencies, including WPB, ODT, WMC, OCD, and the War Labor Board exercised their emergency powers under the President's authority.

During the first two years of the war, OEM's Division of Central Administrative Services maintained ten regional offices and a number of state branches. Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota and the Dakotas constituted Region VI, with a central office at Chicago.

WAR PRODUCTION BOARD and OFFICE OF PRODUCTION MANAGEMENT

The national purpose of the Office of Production Management (OPM) which was established by Executive Order 8629 on January 7, 1941,<sup>1</sup> was to increase, accelerate, and regulate defense production and the supply of materials and components going into national defense; in addition, OPM was charged with insuring co-ordination of government activity directly concerned with defense production.

In Indiana, OPM first went into operation with the establishment of a Bureau of Priorities field office, in Indianapolis, on September 16, 1941. The chief purpose of this office was to supply industry and the public with information about critically short materials and the rules regulating allocation of such materials. Indiana's next OPM field office opened in Indianapolis on November 10, 1941. This was a Contract Distribution office, of which the chief functions were to choose plants for defense production and to facilitate negotiation of defense contracts. A similar office was set up in Evansville. For a brief period OPM in Indianapolis included a Training Within Industry field office, with sub-offices in large Hoosier industrial centers, but in 1942 this agency was transferred to the War Manpower Commission.<sup>2</sup>

The attack on Pearl Harbor echoed resoundingly in the "defense production" program, which now became a war program, calling for emergency reorganization of OPM to handle a growing multitude of urgent and complex problems. When it became necessary to extend and intensify the control of national production for military purposes, the War Production Board (WPB) was created in January, 1942, to tackle the job.<sup>3</sup> The character of controls shifted with the changing problems of the war production program. WPB's first goals were expansion of mining, construction of new plants and tools, and conversion to war work of plants engaged in the least essential civilian production. As the war program progressed, efforts aimed at maximum efficiency in utilization of plants, materials, manpower, managerial talent, transportation, and other limited resources. WPB allocated materials and components among competing national war agencies, war industries, and agencies representing the needs of the civilian economy. WPB also scheduled production programs to insure against conflict, promote maximum output, and keep production in accord with the strategic needs of the chiefs of staff.

The War Production Board established 13 regional field offices in April, 1942, and delegated progressively more authority to them throughout the war. The field offices which had already been established in Indiana by OPM came under the jurisdiction of the Chicago regional office. Eight southern Indiana counties, however, were assigned to the Cleveland region under district offices at Cincinnati and Louisville. The remainder of the state was divided among six districts, five of them with offices in Indiana cities. Of these, the largest was the Indianapolis district, which served 42 counties. Other district offices were located in Evansville, Fort Wayne, Gary, and South Bend. The Evansville district included four counties in Kentucky and seventeen in southern Illinois as well as fifteen counties in Indiana. The Gary district was soon consolidated with the Chicago district, bringing the five northwestern Indiana counties under that office. Thus, three areas within Indiana were serviced from cities outside the state.<sup>4</sup>

FUNCTIONS OF WPB DIVISIONS

THE PRIORITIES DIVISION. Under OPM this unit opened a district office in Indianapolis in September, 1941, with the name, Bureau of Priorities. After the creation of WPB it took on the title, Priorities Division. Finally, it became known as the Priorities Distribution Division. Originally, this office provided industry and the public with information regarding shortages in, and applications for, war-critical materials. In 1942, the division also processed applications for priorities assistance. By 1944, approximately 85% of all plant applications filed in Indiana were handled by the district offices. This phase often required inspection of factories, pending decision on priorities, and such work was assigned to engineers in the division. The division also included specialists in construction, civilian goods distribution, selective service deferment, etc.

THE CONTRACT DISTRIBUTION DIVISION. A field office for this division opened in Indianapolis in November, 1941. Its function was to accelerate defense production by selecting facilities and laying the groundwork for contracts. The office also informed businessmen of the procedures involved in defense contracting and assisted and advised businesses as to sources of money for expansion, conversion, and other defense needs. Later, some of these functions survived in WPB's Production Service Division, while others were transferred to new agencies.

CONSERVATION AND SALVAGE DIVISIONS. Operations that had as their objective, conservation and salvage of industrial materials and waste materials, went through several administrative changes during the lifetime of WPB. The General Salvage Division, working intimately with the State Defense Council, trained and directed volunteers in every county in the state to promote collection of scrap metal, paper, and fat.<sup>5</sup> The Industrial Salvage Division followed a program designed to keep industrial plant personnel at all times aware of the value of scrap material. Constant publicity spread information concerning the kinds of scrap sought and proper ways of delivering it to collection-points and processors. These and other functions were also handled by The Industrial Conservation Bureau when it took the place of earlier WPB conservation and salvage units.

THE MINING DIVISION aimed at increased coal production by introducing labor-saving equipment and by promoting more rapid unloading of cars by coal consumers. Similar operations with basic raw materials were later handled by the Mining Branch of The Materials Division.

THE LABOR PRODUCTION DIVISION. Under OPM, this unit was designed to promote close co-operation of organized labor in the defense program. Its functions soon included efforts to bring about reduction of "work stoppages", especially in war plants and essential civilian services such as transportation. This division also acted as arbitrator in disputes, attempted to minimize conflicts between labor and management, and aided in improving working conditions in less progressive plants.

THE REDISTRIBUTION DIVISION located surplus or idle machine tools and production materials and arranged for their transfer to plants where they were needed. Later, the division arranged for similar redistribution of surpluses that resulted from changes or termination of war contracts, shifting the surpluses to other war plants or to plants reconverting to production of civilian goods. This unit was given the name, Materials Redistribution Division.

THE COMPLIANCE DIVISION was assigned to checking violations of wartime priorities and production regulations. Violations included unauthorized use of critically short materials, excessive purchases, non-essential construction and mis-use of building materials required for war plant expansion and war workers' housing. Compliance units were also attached to various divisions and subdivisions of WPB when surveillance seemed to call for specialized knowledge on the part of investigators.

THE PRODUCTION SERVICE DIVISION assisted the Priorities Division with priorities applications and selective service deferments. Its engineers also placed contracts and broke bottlenecks in materials supply and machine tool production. It became the duty of this division to schedule production in a number of plants in order to overcome the conflicting demands of the several military procurement expeditors. Foundry and forge specialists, and specialists in radar, radio, automotive production, and internal combustion engine production, were included in this unit, which later became known simply as The Production Division.

THE INDUSTRY OPERATIONS DIVISION, originating in January, 1942, overshadowed all other divisions in the early months of WPB. It handled three important tasks: (1) conversion of industry to war production; (2) direction and control of the flow of materials and equipment from the producer to the finished product; (3) control of the point of direction of every industry operating under WPB. This division initially included several of the others for administrative purposes.

THE PRODUCTION URGENCY COMMITTEE OF INDIANA, composed of representatives of five branches of the military services and five civilian agencies, approved or denied proposed construction contracts and schedules in the most critical labor areas. The WPB district manager acted as chairman of the committee. Different parts of the state were designated as critical areas in varying degrees. Production plants were assigned urgency ratings according to their importance to war needs or to the civilian economy. The purpose of the committee was to concentrate production in less critical labor areas and to direct available manpower to plants farthest behind in production of the most critically needed items.

Each district WPB office ordinarily consisted of branches of each of the main divisions of the War Production Board, functioning largely in the phase of activity cut out for them by the regional and national offices, but generally adapting their modes of operation to local conditions. Internal organization and function changed so frequently that it is difficult to represent both personnel and status without excessive duplication. The divisions listed below are simplifications of the evolving organization. In consequence of Executive Order 9638,<sup>6</sup> the War Production Board was terminated on November 3, 1945, and was succeeded by the Civilian Production Administration. The regional and district offices suspended operations at approximately the same time.

INDIANA STATE SALVAGE COMMITTEE

An important part of the plans for gearing industry to national defense, and later to war production, was the program for salvaging the enormous supply of waste materials which could be reprocessed into useful goods. In this enterprise, OPM and WPB on the one hand, and OCD on the other, worked intimately together.<sup>1</sup> When OPM called upon the governors of the states to organize the first great public "scrap drive" for aluminum in July, 1941, the Indiana campaign was staged by the State Defense Council, under the immediate leadership of Frank G. Thompson. Mayors in the cities and county agents in the rural areas were responsible for the success of this drive.

Early in 1942, WPB's Bureau of Industrial Conservation asked Governor Schricker to appoint a Salvage Chairman for Indiana and to complete a statewide organization which would henceforth be responsible for all public conservation efforts. The Bureau itself retained control over industrial salvage and over such specialized centers as automobile graveyards but called upon civilian defense workers for the millions of hours of volunteer labor required in the more general programs, such as the collection of waste paper, scrap metals, rubber, tin, silk, rags, and kitchen fats.

Governor Schricker appointed Clarence Jackson as Salvage Chairman for Indiana in February, 1942. He, in turn, appointed an Executive Secretary and staff, all of whom became employees of WPB, and a State General Salvage Advisory Committee, composed of leaders in service and patriotic organizations, whose members cooperated in salvage operations. Through the county civilian defense directors, 92 County Salvage Chairmen, 232 City Salvage Chairmen, and 1,041 members of local salvage committees were appointed to complete the statewide organization. More than half a million volunteer workers, from Boy Scouts to clubwomen, toiled within this framework to give Indiana its exceptional record in the collection of wartime salvage.

SMALLER WAR PLANTS CORPORATION (SWPC)

The Smaller War Plants Corporation was created by Act of Congress,<sup>1</sup> approved June 11, 1942, to insure that small business concerns be most effectively utilized in the production of articles, equipment, and material for both war and essential civilian purposes.

To these ends, the Corporation was empowered (1) to make loans to small business concerns; (2) to purchase or lease land, plants, equipment, and supplies; (3) to lease or sell such land, plants, equipment, or supplies to any small business concern; (4) to enter into procurement contracts with the United States Government; and (5) to arrange for the performance of such contracts by dividing them among small business concerns.

The Corporation also co-operated with other agencies in facilitating the prompt and equitable settlement of the claims of small prime and subcontractors, arising from the termination of war contracts.

SWPC began operations as a unit of the War Production Board, absorbing some of the functions and personnel of that agency's Contract Distribution Division. SWPC's Indiana districts corresponded to those of WPB, with district offices in Indianapolis, Evansville, Ft. Wayne, and South Bend. On May 1, 1943, SWPC began to function as a separate entity and ceased to be a part of WPB, although the two agencies continued to co-operate.

Executive Order 9665 of December 27, 1945, transferred SWPC's functions to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Department of Commerce, effective January 28, 1946.<sup>2</sup> SWPC was abolished by act of Congress, approved June 30, 1947.<sup>3</sup>

INDIANA MINERAL PRODUCTION

From the beginning of the national emergency it was recognized that the nation's mineral resources would play a vital role in defense or war. Indiana's coal, oil and limestone, particularly the first, were commodities of the utmost importance to the war effort.

A number of government agencies, both federal and state, exerted varying degrees of control over the mining industry. The industry itself, through its trade associations, organized special committees to meet war-born emergencies. The problems of mine production received particular attention from the Office of Civilian Defense.

THE MINES IN CIVILIAN DEFENSE

At the request of the Office of Production Management, Governor Schricker, in 1941, created the office of Emergency Co-ordinator of Mines for Indiana, to advise and assist producers of mineral and quarry products in matters relating to national defense. Liaison between the producers, the War Production Board, and the Civilian Defense Council was maintained by a co-ordinator throughout the war period.

| Name                | Position               |
|---------------------|------------------------|
| Clarence A. Jackson | Emergency Co-ordinator |
| Edward S. Stegen    | Deputy Co-ordinator    |
| William J. Tipton   | Mines Co-ordinator     |

U. S. BUREAU OF MINES

An agency of long-standing, this bureau of the Department of the Interior played an active part in the war effort. It aided greatly in stockpiling strategic minerals, exploring for new mineral resources and experimenting with new types of fuel. In addition, it controlled the production of helium, operated pilot plants for manganese beneficiation, licensed all explosives manufacture, and inspected coal mines for compliance with safety regulations. The Health and Safety Branch Field Office for District E is located at Vincennes.

Charles A. Herbert                      State Supervising Engineer                      1940    1945

BITUMINOUS COAL DIVISION

In 1939, this division of the Department of the Interior succeeded the National Bituminous Coal Commission, which had been established by law in 1937 to regulate the bituminous coal mining industry. A Statistical Bureau in Indianapolis collected cost reports from the mines in Indiana and transmitted them to the Division in Washington, for use in compiling the price-fixing and marketing regulations of the bituminous mining code. The statistical resources of the division were useful, during the period of national defense and the early years of the war, to those responsible for integrating the mining industry with the war production program. The division expired by statutory limitation in August, 1943.

BITUMINOUS COAL PRODUCERS BOARD

The Bituminous Coal Producers Board for District No. 11 (Indiana) was organized, pursuant to the provisions of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937,<sup>1</sup> on June 22, 1937, and was in operation until the Act expired on August 23, 1943.

Among the duties of the Board were the classification of the coals produced in Indiana; proposal of minimum prices for such coals to the Bituminous Coal Commission; co-ordination of such prices with the prices of coals produced in competing states; and the investigation of violations of such minimum prices.

The Board consisted of seventeen members, sixteen elected by the producers, and one by employees.

INDIANA COALS CORPORATION

The Indiana Coals Corporation was organized in 1940, as a marketing agency for its members, pursuant to approval of the Bituminous Coal Division of the Department of the Interior. It functioned as a marketing agency until the expiration of the Bituminous Coal Act in 1943, and continued thereafter as a market statistical agency in the compilation of market statistics and the preparation of coal distribution reports for its members, as required by the Solid Fuels Administration for War.

SOLID FUELS ADMINISTRATION FOR WAR

On April 19, 1943, this agency within the Department of Interior replaced the Office of Solid Fuels Co-ordinator for War, which had been devised by the President to collect information and make recommendations for the maintenance of an adequate supply of solid fuels. It subsequently expanded its facilities and assumed greater powers in determining policy for the coal mining industries, and in recommending action concerning production, rationing, price control, manpower and machinery allocation, and transportation of fuels to other government agencies. A field office in Indianapolis served as distribution center for Indiana. It also administered the directives of the Coal Mines Administration when that agency of the government operated the mines at intervals between 1943 and 1945.

THE BITUMINOUS COAL PRODUCERS ADVISORY BOARD

The Bituminous Coal Producers Advisory Board for Indiana was organized August 16, 1943, to serve as a voluntary advisory and informative group to the Solid Fuels Administrator for War. The duties of the Board, as prescribed by Executive Order 9332,<sup>2</sup> were to (1) give advice to the Solid Fuels Administrator for War on such matters as he might request; (2) collect data in regard to available supplies of coal, cost and realization figures concerning the effect of maximum prices on the efficient operation of mines, and tonnage production.

With certain minor changes in membership, this Board also served as the Bituminous Coal Industry Advisory Committee for District No. 11 under the Solid Fuels Price Branch of OPA, and as the Advisory Committee to the Office of Defense Transportation. In these capacities, members of the Committee traveled frequently to Washington to advise price control officials in regard to price and rationing regulations in the coal industry.

VOLUNTARY INDUSTRY COMMITTEE ON COAL EMERGENCIES

In the critical coal shortage of 1945, a Voluntary Industry Committee was formed to allocate Indiana coal supplies to communities where the shortage threatened to endanger health. This voluntary committee rendered valuable service to the Solid Fuels Administration.

INDIANA COAL PREPARATION AND UTILIZATION SOCIETY

This Association, unique in the annals of coal mining, was organized on March 10, 1944, for the purpose of bringing together in monthly meetings the Indiana engineers and other interested parties associated with the coal industry for exchange of ideas and experiences. General discussions and prepared talks upon topics of interest bearing upon the problems of coal preparation and utilization characterized these meetings.

WAR MANPOWER COMMISSION

The tremendous task of finding and allocating the necessary manpower for each of the multiple requisites of a total war led to the creation of the War Manpower Commission by Executive Order 9139 on April 18, 1942.<sup>1</sup> The Commission, whose chairman throughout its existence was a native Hoosier, Paul V. McNutt, was given the authority to direct the labor recruitment and utilization policies of a number of federal agencies. Subsequent executive orders transferred to its immediate jurisdiction many of these agencies, including the Office of Procurement and Assignment,<sup>2</sup> the United States Employment Service, the National Youth Administration,<sup>3</sup> the Apprenticeship Training Service,<sup>4</sup> the Training Within Industry Service<sup>5</sup> and, for one year, the Selective Service System.<sup>6</sup>

The Indiana State Employment Service, which had been maintaining twenty-five field offices in as many Indiana cities at the beginning of the national emergency period in September, 1939, was taken over completely by the United States Employment Service on January 1, 1942. On September 17, 1942, the latter agency came under the direction of the War Manpower Commission. These supervisory changes served to integrate the work of the local employment offices in Indiana more closely with the national war effort.

During the period from December, 1942, to July, 1943, nine war manpower areas were established within Indiana and central offices were located in a major city in each area. The USES offices in each area were brought under the control of the areal officials in order to integrate the placement services with other WMC functions. Field supervisors from each areal center visited the local offices and a few other communities which were served on a part-time basis. Analysts, statisticians, counselors, and specialists of various sorts were employed to carry out the complicated operations by which the War Manpower Commission sought to fulfill its mission.

Originally, the nine area offices in Indiana were directly supervised by the regional office in Chicago. In October, 1943, however, a state WMC office was established in Indianapolis, with control over the eighty-seven Indiana counties which comprised the nine manpower areas. Clark, Crawford, Floyd, Harrison, and Washington counties remained under the Louisville office. The officials at Indianapolis served as liaison between the area and regional offices in WMC's highly decentralized operation. Their tasks were to study and estimate the manpower requirements of the various areas within the state, to co-ordinate the many labor training agencies, to direct the placement of workers in the jobs where they were most urgently needed, to see that labor was being used with the greatest possible effectiveness, and to inform the public of the agency's policies and activities.

Although there had been a Veterans' Employment Representative in the Indiana State Employment Service office since before the war, the funds made available by the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944 encouraged a considerable expansion in the personnel of this branch. Veterans' Representatives were thereafter maintained in each USES office in Indiana.

On February 29, 1944, a state Manpower Priorities Committee was organized to determine and apply a system of manpower priority ratings to employers' requests for additional labor. This committee was later split into committees for northern and southern Indiana, which held regular meetings until after the end of the war. Representatives of the armed services and of ten civilian agencies concerned with the allocation of manpower constituted the membership of these committees.

Labor Management Committees were also set up in each of the nine areas and, in some cases, in smaller districts within the area. Composed of equal numbers of representative business and labor leaders, these volunteer committees were active and effective in advising WMC officials of the needs of their areas, and frequently, in helping to alleviate a "tight" labor situation.

On May 1, 1944, the nine area offices in Indiana were reduced to six in number by the merger of the Terre Haute and Bloomington areas with the Evansville office, and the consolidation of the Lafayette and Gary areas. These changes are indicated on the accompanying map.

The War Manpower Commission was terminated by Executive Order 9617<sup>7</sup> on September 19, 1945, but the actual liquidation of its offices was a gradual process. The employment offices were not returned to state control from the USES until November 15, 1946. USES itself was transferred to the Department of Labor at the dissolution of the War Manpower Commission.

The War Manpower Commission, of course, drew much of its personnel in Indiana from the Indiana State Employment Service and the Unemployment Compensation Division. So closely related were these agencies that it is difficult, and in fact, impractical always to distinguish between state service and federal service. The period of service covered in the following roster is that between the years 1940 and 1946, without such distinction except where it is significant. The terminal date used in any case is November 15, 1946, when the employment offices returned to state control.

WMC AREA OFFICES
USES LOCAL OFFICES

In the following roster, the nine original WMC Area Offices are listed, together with the local employment offices which existed within each area. Only the Directors of the Area Offices, and the Managers and Veterans' Representatives of the local USES Offices are named. Lack of space prevents the inclusion of other WMC employees who performed valuable and important services. The membership of the volunteer labor management committees is printed as fully as it could be obtained. The dates given for period of service in the WMC Area Offices vary according to the time during which these offices were in existence. The dates given for service in the USES offices cover the period 1940 to 1942, when they were under ISES control, and extend to November, 1946, when they returned to state control. Transfers within the agency, which were frequent, are not indicated in the footnotes.

INDIANA BI-RACIAL COMMITTEE

The problem of integrating the labor potential of Indiana's Negro population, constituting 3.5% of the whole, into the total production battle was solved most efficiently in Indiana by the organization of the Bi-Racial Committee. This step was taken in June, 1941, prior to any similar action on a national level, when Governor Schricker appointed sixteen prominent Negro leaders to work jointly with a committee of industrial leaders from the State Chamber of Commerce toward the solution of the problem. Prior to this time, the Governor had already appointed a Negro, Dr. Theodore Cable, to the State Advisory Defense Council, and had made J. Chester Allen the Co-ordinator of Negro activities in the defense program.<sup>1</sup>

Local bi-racial committees, modeled somewhat after the state committee with the addition of labor union representatives, were subsequently organized in twenty-one Indiana cities. The principal duty of this state-wide mechanism was to increase employment opportunities for Negroes, especially in war industries. By a number of devices it succeeded in doing this so successfully that Negro unemployment fell from nearly 54% to less than 20% within eight months after the bi-racial plan went into operation. The technique usually employed was the democratic process of committee meeting, conference with community leaders, and steady pressure toward the achievement of a defined goal. In addition to dealing with the immediate problem of Negro employment, the bi-racial committees encouraged the provision of better housing for the colored population, urged enlargement of technical training opportunities for Negro workers in the schools, intervened in situations which threatened racial conflicts, and developed educational programs among the Negroes in regard to health, recreation, and juvenile delinquency.<sup>2</sup>

INDIANA EMPLOYMENT SECURITY DIVISION

Established by the General Assembly in 1936, as the Unemployment Compensation Division, this agency acquired its present title in 1941. It is the direct outgrowth of the encouragement given to the states by the National Social Security Act of 1935 to create unemployment compensation systems. Federal legislation defines eligibility for unemployment compensation, sets the rates at which employers pay into unemployment funds, and provides that administrative expenses of the state offices be paid by funds from the Federal Security Administration. The two principal functions of the state board, originally, were to administer financial benefits to eligible unemployed workers, and to maintain a statewide employment service. The latter activity, which was taken over by the Federal Government during the war, is described in this Directory under the War Manpower Commission.<sup>1</sup>

Unemployment benefits in Indiana are derived from a payroll tax, the proceeds of which are deposited with the Treasurer of the United States, and invested in federal securities. It is obvious that the normal operation of this system served to cushion the most serious effects of unemployment, during the periods of industrial conversion to war production and reconversion to peace time pursuits. In addition to affording this stabilizing effect to the economy, the IESD, after September 3, 1944, also undertook the administration, in Indiana, of readjustment allowances to veterans, provided by the G. I. Bill of Rights. During the first six months of 1946, these payments to veterans exceeded those to eligible state unemployment compensation claimants. Furthermore, the agency's current payroll and employment data was indispensable to the proper planning of manpower distribution. Thus the work of the Division was closely related to, and greatly affected by, the war.

Policies of the IESD are determined by a non-partisan board of five members, appointed by the governor, representing labor, employers, and the public. The Division is administered by a Director and his staff from a state office located in Indianapolis. Although this office was reorganized several times during the war, its various sections were necessarily concerned with the fundamental tasks of the Division: receiving contributions from employers, inspecting and auditing employers' records, establishing eligibility of employees, receiving claims, and making payments. An appellate section with an independent review board settled controversial claims, and a number of staff services were performed by other officers. Two sections of particular interest to the public were the Information Service, responsible for publicizing the work of the Division, and the Research and Statistics Service, which compiled and published a number of valuable studies.<sup>2</sup>

FIELD OFFICES

The IESD maintained a number of field offices in which local representatives of the Claims Service and the Employment Service were located.<sup>5</sup> The former remained under state control throughout the war. Attached to some of these offices were the Field Examiners of the Audit Section who served as liaison agents between the Division and employers throughout the state.

WAR RELOCATION AUTHORITY

The War Relocation Authority played a minor role in securing labor for particularly hard pressed rural areas. This federal agency was created by Executive Order 9102, issued on March 18, 1942.<sup>1</sup> Its principal task was to resettle the 110,000 persons of Japanese ancestry, from the western coastal area, in ten relocation centers, from which individuals of proven loyalty could be placed in war jobs throughout the nation. Field relocation offices were established to facilitate the process by finding essential work for the evacuees.

The Indianapolis field office, which opened in April, 1943, was responsible for relocating evacuees in the State of Indiana, exclusive of Lake County. Through its efforts, and those of the Chicago district office, 254 Japanese-Americans were located in Indiana before the field offices closed, early in 1946.

DIVISION OF SUPERVISION OF STATE FARMS AND PENAL INDUSTRIAL SALES

This division of the state government, organized in 1941, was made responsible for the centralized supervision and control of the productive programs in Indiana's corrective institutions. The production of industrial goods in prison workshops, and of agricultural produce on the state farms was, during the war, not only a desirable form of penal discipline but an important contribution to victory as well. With the relaxation of certain peace time legislation which prohibited competition on the open market between prison products and those of private industry, the division was able to channel a not inconsiderable portion of this production into military and civilian defense agencies. In this manner the state's wards were able to make their contribution to the war effort.

A governing board, consisting of the heads of five state institutions, elected by the entire group of state institution superintendents, exercised general supervision over the division. A Supervisor and staff carried out the administrative details. This agency was superseded by the Division of Procurement and Supply in 1945.<sup>1</sup>

LABOR AGENCIES

The complexity of the relations between organized labor and the other components of America's free economy made it undesirable and, in fact, impossible during the war for "labor problems" to be handled by any single governmental agency, as was the case in some warring countries. In the effort to utilize American manpower in war production to the fullest extent without sacrificing the essential rights of labor, which were the product of a long and historic development, the government's tendency was to add new agencies, as the need for them became apparent, to pre-existing ones, which continued to play important roles in the process. The more important of these agencies, in addition to the War Manpower Commission and others already mentioned, are included within the following pages.

NATIONAL WAR LABOR BOARD

On January 12, 1942, the National War Labor Board was established within the Office for Emergency Management by Executive Order 9017.<sup>1</sup> It succeeded the National Defense Mediation Board, which had been created to prevent, as far as possible, labor disputes which might interfere with the national defense program. The NWLB, by subsequent legislation and executive orders, was given broad powers over labor and management wherever industrial conflict threatened to impede the war effort.

In January, 1943, original jurisdiction over all labor dispute, wage, and salary adjustment cases was delegated to the twelve regional boards. Indiana was included in the Sixth Region, with board headquarters in Chicago. The Chicago Regional Board handled a number of cases in Indiana, usually by assignment first to investigating panels. It used as its local representatives the field offices of the Department of Labor, through which cases were certified for its consideration.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

In addition to the National War Labor Board, the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, and the labor sections of such war agencies as WMC, WPB, and WFA, labor problems demanded the continuing attention of the older federal agencies. Important in this framework was the National Labor Relations Board, which had been created in 1935, by Congress, to administer the Wagner Act.<sup>1</sup> Its principal duties were to prevent the continuation of unfair labor practices proscribed by the Act, and to conduct elections in order to determine employees' agents in collective bargaining. The proper functioning of collective bargaining machinery obviously insured a maximum production of war materials by a democratic process.

Until April, 1943, Indiana was divided between two NLRB regions. The larger part of the state, together with western Kentucky, comprised Region No. 11, with headquarters in Indianapolis. The Thirteenth Region, with regional office in Chicago, included the nine northernmost counties in Indiana. A reorganization, in 1943, made the Indianapolis office a field station of the Ninth Region, centering in Cincinnati, and placed portions of Indiana under regional offices at St. Louis and Chicago. The original arrangement was restored December 1, 1944, and continued until 1947.

The regional offices of the National Labor Relations Board conducted investigations resulting in (1) informal case dispositions such as settlement agreements, voluntary withdrawals, or consent elections, or (2) formal dispositions, through dismissal or Board decision based on full hearing. In addition, during the war years, the regional offices conducted the strike votes required by the War Labor Disputes Act (Smith-Connelly Act).<sup>2</sup>

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

The functions performed by the established bureaus of the national Department of Labor were vital to the war effort as they had been to the peace time protection of labor. Of the six principal operating units within the Department—(1) the U. S. Conciliation Service, (2) the Bureau of Labor Statistics, (3) the Wage and Hour and Public Contracts Divisions, (4) the Women's Bureau, (5) the Children's Bureau, and (6) the Division of Labor Standards—the first three had field offices in Indiana during the war. The latter three units, which enforced federal legislation dealing with the employment of women and children and with general working conditions, maintained regional offices in Chicago, from which field workers covered Indiana.

UNITED STATES CONCILIATION SERVICE

The officers of this agency stood ready at all times to prevent industrial conflict by suggesting settlements of labor disputes. Cases which could not be conciliated were certified to the War Labor Board. A field office was maintained in Indianapolis.

WAGE AND HOUR AND PUBLIC CONTRACTS DIVISIONS

These Divisions of the Department of Labor, united in October, 1942, administered the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938,<sup>1</sup> and the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act of 1936.<sup>2</sup> The former law fixed minimum wage and overtime standards for interstate activities and restricted child labor; the latter provided for the setting of minimum wage rates based on the prevailing minima in industries, and included overtime and child labor standards for employees working on government supply contracts.

The normal work load of the Divisions increased greatly with the multiplication of government contracts during the war, and the undertaking of duties for various war agencies. Their field offices served as local agencies for the National War Labor Board in receiving complaints and certifying cases for disposal. The Divisions maintained a field office for the State of Indiana in Indianapolis and a number of inspectors in other industrial cities.

INDIANA STATE DIVISION OF LABOR

This division was established within the Department of Commerce and Industry in 1937, primarily for the purpose of encouraging industrial peace in Indiana by promoting arbitration and conciliation, avoiding strikes and lockouts, and preventing discrimination in employment.<sup>1</sup> The previously established Industrial Board and the Bureaus of Mines and Mining, Factory Inspection, Boiler Inspection, and Women and Children became subdivisions of the new agency. By encouraging the employment of handicapped persons, by reducing industrial accidents, by supervising the increased employment of women, by peaceful settlement of impending labor disputes, and by many other services, the Indiana State Division of Labor contributed its full share to the war effort. In 1945, the Division was reorganized as an independent Department.

The State Labor Commissioner was a member of the Administrative Council from the time of its organization in 1941.<sup>1</sup> He appointed a Labor Co-ordinator who was an important part of the permanent staff at state headquarters and who succeeded in smoothing out many of the incipient difficulties which involved labor in Indiana. The Commissioner also appointed a Labor Advisory Committee to assist the Indiana State Defense Council. It consisted of ten prominent Hoosier labor leaders.

PART SIX

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTION

In the opening days of the war, Claude R. Wickard, the Hoosier Secretary of Agriculture, issued the famous statement, "Food will win the war and write the peace." His own state's increase of 49% in farm production within the next four years was an emphatic confirmation of his words.

The Hoosier farmers' record of meeting the "impossible" goals of increased production in each of the war years constitutes one of the most dramatic stories of Indiana's war effort. Handicapped by shortages of labor, machinery, and repair services, farmers were nevertheless assigned production quotas substantially higher than pre-war yields. These quotas were not only attained, but surpassed. The agencies through which the agricultural war effort was mobilized, co-ordinated, and effectively channeled are outlined in the following section.

WAR FOOD ADMINISTRATION

After a series of shifts and consolidations the agricultural war effort at the national level was finally co-ordinated in the War Food Administration. Executive Order 9280 of December 5, 1942, established within the Department of Agriculture a Food Distribution Administration by consolidating the Agricultural Marketing Administration, the Sugar Agency, the distribution functions of the Office for Agricultural War Relations, the regulatory work of the Bureau of Animal Industry, and certain food units of the War Production Board. Under a Food Production Administration, created by the same executive order, were grouped the Agricultural Adjustment Agency, the Farm Credit Administration (which returned to its former status as a separate agency on March 26, 1943), the Farm Security Administration, the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation, and the Soil Conservation Service. Food production activities of the War Production Board, the Office of Agricultural War Relations, and the Division of Farm Management and Costs in the Bureau of Agricultural Economics were also assigned to the Food Production Administration.

Executive Order 9322 of March 26, 1943, consolidated the Food Production Administration, Food Distribution Administration, Commodity Credit Corporation, and the Extension Service of the Department of Agriculture under the direction and supervision of an administrator, directly responsible to the President. The agency thus created became the War Food Administration. Its functions were to determine military and civilian food requirements, allocate the nation's farm production resources as needed, assign priorities, make allocations of food for all uses, and insure efficient and proper distribution of food supply. It was terminated by Executive Order 9577 of June 29, 1945, and its functions, duties, and powers were transferred to the Secretary of Agriculture.<sup>1</sup>

The War Food Administration functioned through the regional and state offices of its component agencies.

The food production program was promoted through a system of state and county boards which were initiated in July, 1941, by Secretary of Agriculture Claude R. Wickard, a native Hoosier. These United States Department of Agriculture Defense Boards, as they were first termed, were established in each state and in each agricultural county, including all 92 Indiana counties. On January 7, 1942, the name was changed to USDA State and County War Boards. Mr. Wickard designated that the chairman of each state AAA Committee and the chairman of each county AAA Committee should be chairmen of these Boards.

The Boards were composed of the principal field officer in each community from each of the following agencies of the Department of Agriculture: Agricultural Adjustment Agency, Bureau of Agricultural Economics, Farm Credit Administration, Farm Security Administration, Office of Distribution, Forest Service, Rural Electrification Administration, Soil Conservation Service, and Agricultural Extension Service. State Commissioners of Agriculture and State Supervisors of Vocational Agriculture and comparable county representatives were also members of State and County War Boards.

The principal functions of the State and County War Boards were to co-ordinate the work of Agricultural Department field agents and to co-operate with war agencies outside the Department. Among other activities, the War Boards advised farmers regarding sources of credit; assisted in the rationing of new farm machinery and in obtaining the fullest possible use of existing machinery; made recommendations to Selective Service Boards regarding the deferment of farm operators and agricultural workers; promoted designated programs of a patriotic nature, such as bond drives, salvage and scrap programs, and other wartime campaigns; and made recommendations to the War Food Administrator and the Secretary of Agriculture concerning the establishment, modification, or termination of existing programs.<sup>2</sup>

Liaison with County Defense Councils was maintained through the County Agricultural Agents who were mandated members of County Councils.

In accordance with Memorandum No. 1132 issued by the Secretary of Agriculture on October 26, 1945, the War Boards were reorganized as USDA State and County Councils during November and December, 1945.

This pre-war federal agency, created as the Agricultural Adjustment Administration in 1933, became a part of the War Food Administration with its creation in 1943, and thereafter played an important role in the farmers' war effort. Its primary function was to administer the complex system of acreage allotments, benefit payments, and crop insurance by which the Federal Government had sought to curtail agricultural production during the depression years. In wartime, the objective was reversed, and the same machinery was utilized to encourage virtually unlimited production.

The administrative organ of the AAA in Indiana was the Agriculture Conservation Committee, which co-ordinated all phases of the AAA program, including soil conservation and commodity loans as well as those previously mentioned. This committee was composed of three participating farmers, the chairman, and the state director of extension. County and township committees were elected by participating farmers from among their own number. These committees provided a direct means of informing farmers quickly and accurately on production needs and methods of fulfilling them. The committeemen assisted farmers in planning their individual operations in line with wartime production goals for crops and livestock. State and county AAA chairmen served as chairmen of the USDA War Boards.<sup>5</sup>

AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION SERVICE

When war came, the long-established Agricultural Extension Service proved to be an excellent medium for the transmission of essential information and assistance to the hard-pressed farmers of Indiana. Established originally by state law in 1911 and subsequently incorporated within the work of the Department of Agriculture by federal legislation, the Extension Service exists for the purpose of carrying the information provided by the work of the Experiment Station and of the School of Agriculture at Purdue University to farmers throughout the state. In 1943, the Extension Service was consolidated within the War Food Administration.

In promoting the war effort Extension worked with everything from seeds to the disposal of harvested crops; from improved varieties to methods of canning, freezing, drying, and storing; from the small Victory Gardens to the farms of hundreds of acres; from the collection of milkweed floss for life-saving jackets to the planting and harvesting of Indiana's tomato crop; and from corn detasseling camps to the efficient use of foreign and prisoner-of-war labor.<sup>6</sup> Promotion media included press and radio publicity, Farmers' Institutes, 4-H Clubs, and Extension Schools. In co-operation with Civilian Defense, a network of volunteer neighborhood leaders was organized for the purpose of carrying urgent wartime information to all farm people.

COUNTY AGRICULTURAL AGENTS<sup>8</sup>

The Indiana Vocational Act, enacted by the 1913 General Assembly, provided for the establishment of vocational agricultural courses in the public schools and the employment of county agents throughout the state.<sup>9</sup> The agent's appointment is made by the director of the Extension Service of Purdue University, subject to approval by the county board of education.

Under supervision of Purdue University, the principal duties of a county agent are: (1) to co-operate with Farmers' Institutes and farmers' groups, (2) to conduct practical farm demonstrations and to promote boys' and girls' group activities and other movements for the advancement of agriculture, (3) to give advice to farmers on practical farm problems, (4) to aid the county superintendent of schools in giving practical education in agriculture and domestic science, and (5) to assist farmers in complying with various Federal laws and agricultural programs. In the last-mentioned capacity, especially, he played an indispensable role in the war effort.

HOME DEMONSTRATION AGENTS

Many counties employ a home demonstration agent to assist the county agent. The home demonstration agents are appointed by the

FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION

Since 1916, the Farm Credit Administration has existed for the purpose of providing a complete and co-ordinated credit system for agriculture. In 1942, it was made a part of the Food Production Administration, but in 1943, when the War Food Administration was organized, it was returned to its separate status under the Secretary of Agriculture.

The facilities and services of the Farm Credit Administration were greatly expanded to meet the requirements of a war economy. Production credit associations and field representatives of the Emergency Crop and Feed Loan Offices maintained close contact with the County War Boards in order to be informed on the programs stressed from time to time. Farmers were urged to repay their debts and to buy War Bonds during the war period. An increased volume of loans went largely to co-operatives engaged in providing foods for shipment under the Lend-Lease Act and for the armed forces. The Farm Credit Administration worked with other government offices in meeting wartime problems with reference to agricultural requirements for metals, paper, burlap, and other critical materials.

FARM SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

Created as the Resettlement Administration in 1935, this agency acquired its present name in 1937, and became a unit of the Food Production Administration in 1942. On July 1, 1945, it again became a division of the Department of Agriculture.

Since the FSA had been designed to aid marginal farmers during the depression, it served well as a means of encouraging the small producer to a maximum war effort. Its wartime activities included (1) recruiting and transporting surplus farm laborers in southern Indiana to central and northern Indiana, (2) giving technical guidance and advice to operators of small farms, (3) encouraging repayment of loans and making new loans to increase war food production, (4) providing loans for flood restoration, farm purchase by tenant families and returning veterans, and (5) moving farm families from land acquired by the Federal Government for war purposes. FSA officials took an active part in the activities of the USDA War Boards.

The FSA in Indiana functioned through a state director and a system of district and county supervisors. Advisory committees were formed at the state and county levels. Twenty county offices in northern Indiana and nineteen in the southern part of the state were served by the two district offices during the war years. The regional office for Region III, which included Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, and Missouri was located at Indianapolis.

FOREST SERVICE

The U. S. Forest Service, which had long been charged with the duty of administering the National Forest preserves, stimulating the development of the country's timber resources, and promoting research in the field of forestry, acquired additional responsibilities in wartime. Of these, the principal task was to aid in meeting the greatly increased need for timber production without devastation of forest resources. Co-operation with defense units in forest fire prevention was another key activity. These tasks required close co-ordination with the other federal agencies in the War Food Administration, with the state Division of Forestry<sup>10</sup> and with farm organizations.

SOIL CONSERVATION SERVICE

The Soil Conservation Service was established by federal statute in 1935 to assist in bringing about physical adjustments in land use for human welfare, the conservation of natural resources, the establishment of a permanently balanced agriculture, and the reduction of hazards from floods and sedimentation. The program of the SCS was carried out principally through local voluntary associations of land-owners for conservation practices, water-disposal plans, tree-planting, etc. In 1937, the Indiana General Assembly enacted legislation by which farmers were authorized to organize soil conservation districts for carrying out their own conservation work. The Soil Conservation Service assigned trained technicians to offer technical assistance and to administer the federal program in each district.

During the war period the SCS formulated policies and developed criteria to guide WFA agencies in matters pertaining to conservation and the use of soil and water for war production. Upon request it also helped the War Department in protecting and improving land acquired for military purposes and assisted in using trees, shrubs, and grasses for camouflage. It helped solve water-supply problems in vital defense areas, provided aerial maps for war agencies, and co-operated closely with the Weather Bureau. Stimulated by the wartime demand for maximum productive use of their land, Indiana farmers co-operated with the SCS as never before. The number of Soil Conservation Districts increased from 12 to 26 during the years 1943-1945, and the acreage involved from 1,000,000 to 5,000,000.<sup>11</sup> Hoosier farmers met their production goals by technical improvement of land already under cultivation rather than by the indiscriminate plowing up of marginal acres which characterized agricultural expansion in World War I.

The increased work of the agency, however, was accomplished without an appreciable augmentation of staff. Prior to 1942, when many of the agency's projects were planned in co-operation with CCC and WPA to provide work relief, the state had been divided into two conservation areas with a complete office staff for each one, and a state co-ordinator over both. In June, 1942, the two areal offices were consolidated into a single state office under a State Conservationist, responsible for all SCS work in Indiana. Work-Group offices, with a district conservationist in charge, were established below the state office level to work with the Soil Conservation District organizations in their area. Work Units, composed of a farm planner and assistants, were set up in each District.

OFFICE OF DISTRIBUTION

The Food Distribution Administration,<sup>16</sup> which had been established within the Department of Agriculture in December, 1942, became a part of the War Food Administration upon its organization in March, 1943. On January 21, 1944, the name was changed to Office of Distribution.

The job of the Office of Distribution was to see that the food produced on American farms was available at the right place, at the right time, and in the proper form. Its special functions included the development of recommendations for (1) allocation of available food supplies among various claimants, including the armed forces, the civilian population, the Allies, and territories freed from the Axis; (2) nutritional standards to assist in food allocations; (3) rationing of various foods to provide equitable distribution of supplies; (4) food conservation by civilian consumers; (5) programs to promote economies in the distribution of foods; (6) programs aimed at efficiency in transportation and warehousing of farm products; (7) regulation of the distribution of materials needed for processing foodstuffs.<sup>17</sup> In many cases, the Office of Distribution was made responsible also for the execution of these programs.

The Office of Distribution's administrative tasks were accomplished by the following means: (1) the issuing and enforcement of food orders designed to eliminate the loss of food in distribution channels; (2) the purchase of food for the armed forces, for the Allies, and for certain domestic purposes, such as the Community School Lunch program; (3) the collection and release of statistical marketing data and the maintenance of official standards of quality; (4) the enforcement of a large number of federal market service and regulatory statutes; and (5) the conduct of educational programs such as the "Food Fights for Freedom" campaign.

The Food Distribution Administration operated in Indiana through an organization of service divisions, the most important of which was the Civilian Program Branch. Area Supervisors administered its program in each of the eight areas in the state (later reduced to four). Other divisions, inherited from the Agricultural Marketing Service, maintained the necessary relations with associations of producers and agricultural brokers.

VICTORY GARDENS

The Victory Garden program was devised to meet the unprecedented demand for vegetables by the armed forces, allied nations, and the expanded home-front labor force. Sponsored jointly by the U. S. Department of Agriculture and the Office of Civilian Defense, the plan was first launched in 1942, and was expanded in each of the three succeeding years.

Victory Garden committees were appointed in connection with the service division of the Defense Council in many counties. The County Agricultural Agent's office was the focal point for information on the subject. Channels of promotion were the Rural Neighborhood System and City Block System organized by Agricultural Extension and Civilian Defense.

Radio stations, newspapers, service and civic clubs, factories, railroads, public service and rural organizations co-operated in boosting the program in Indiana. Bulletins, press releases, Victory Garden News Kits, radio transcriptions, and other publicity materials were prepared at Purdue University and distributed throughout the state. Some counties published a county or city garden manual, held poster contests, and to some extent provided cash for prize winning gardens and exhibits.

It was estimated that by 1945 the number of gardens in Indiana had been pushed over the 800,000 mark. Retail value of the vegetables produced in 1944 was estimated at $25,000,000.

Preservation of fruits and vegetables was an important phase of the program. This activity was promoted by home demonstration agents, home economics clubs, and the home economics departments of public schools.

AGRICULTURAL EQUIPMENT MOBILIZATION

The Department of Agriculture, in August, 1942, established a procedure by which Department equipment could be made available for use in civilian defense in the event of a war emergency. A Regional USDA Equipment Mobilization Committee was organized at Columbus, Ohio, for Defense Area V. This committee appointed a contact officer for each county having USDA equipment. This official was directed to maintain an inventory of equipment and to establish liaison with the County Defense Council so that in an emergency the equipment would be available for immediate use. A State Coordinator maintained liaison with the State Defense Council and outlined plans for rapid transfer of equipment to emergency areas.

STATE AGRICULTURAL AGENCIES

In the reorganization of state administrative agencies made by the General Assembly in 1933, a Division of Agriculture was created within the Department of Commerce and Industries. The Lieutenant-Governor was made the Commissioner of Agriculture and charged with the administration of certain state laws relating to agriculture and with the co-ordination of public agricultural activities. The most important function of the Commissioner and of the non-executive state Board of Agriculture under the 1933 statute was the management of the annual Indiana State Fair. In 1943, the name of the Indiana Board of Agriculture was changed to simply the Indiana State Fair Board. During the war years, the Board was composed of eighteen members, two of whom were ex officio, three appointed directly by the Governor, and thirteen appointed after nomination by state agricultural societies.

For 89 years, prior to 1942, the Indiana State Fair had occupied a key position in the state's agricultural life, and the usual preparations were going forward when, in April of that year, the War Department requested that the Fair Grounds be turned over to the Army Air Force for the duration as a training center and storage depot. Successful 4-H Club Fairs were held with limited facilities in 1943, 1944, and 1945, but the great State Fair remained a war casualty until the fall of 1946, when the long-postponed "Ninetieth" was finally held.

STATE SOIL CONSERVATION COMMITTEE

The 1937 state law which provided for the formation of soil conservation districts<sup>1</sup> designated that a State Soil Conservation Committee should co-ordinate the activities of such districts with similar work sponsored by federal or other state agencies. As amended in 1945, the law provides for a chairman and five members appointed by the Governor.

The Committee encourages the formation of soil conservation districts under terms of the state law. Interested farmers join in petitioning for formation of a district in their community. After investigation and approval, the State Committee appoints two supervisors to serve with three supervisors elected by the participating farmers. Following organization, the district assists in carrying out within its boundaries soil conservation, erosion control, or erosion prevention projects of federal or state agencies. The activities of this committee have enabled the federal Soil Conservation Service in Indiana to confine its work almost wholly to advisory functions.

MILK CONTROL BOARD

The Indiana Milk Control Board functioned under the Milk Control Act first passed in 1935, and renewed until expiration on July 1, 1943. The Lieutenant-Governor, as Commissioner of Agriculture, was chairman of the board. Six other members were appointed by the Governor, two representing consumers, two producers, and two distributors. Duties of the board were the designation of marketing areas and the regulation of

STATE LIVE STOCK SANITARY BOARD

As the board of health for Indiana's domestic animals, most of which were vital to a successful prosecution of the war, the Live Stock Sanitary Board played an important part in the state's war effort. The Board's work consisted of statistical record-keeping, inspection of flocks and herds, eradication of contagious diseases, certification of imported animals, and a certain degree of supervision over the state's veterinarians.

During the war period, the Live Stock Sanitary Board consisted of two veterinarians and three stock raisers, all appointed by the Governor. The two veterinarian members also constituted the Veterinary Examining Board for the licensing of practitioners. The State Veterinarian, appointed by the Governor, served as the secretary and chief administrative officer of the Board.

The State Egg Board regulates the sale of eggs in Indiana. The 1939 law, as amended in 1941, under which the board functions, is designed to afford protection to retailers and consumers of eggs. The law requires that all eggs sold, offered, or exposed for sale shall be edible. Retailers and wholesalers are registered. Periodic inspections are held and wilful violators prosecuted. The board is composed of seven members appointed by the Governor and representing designated groups. Members serve for three years with overlapping terms.

STATE FARM LABOR COMMITTEE

The year 1942, with its tremendous expansion of the armed forces and of industrial job opportunities, brought a serious labor shortage to American agriculture. The War Manpower Commission handed this problem to the Department of Agriculture, and Secretary Wickard assigned it to his Extension Service. Acting upon instructions from Washington, Dean Reed of Purdue University, Director of the Extension Service in Indiana, appointed a State Farm Labor Committee to meet with and advise Associate Director L. E. Hoffman, who was made responsible for carrying out the farm labor recruitment program. Various devices were used by which non-farm high school youth were encouraged to spend their summers on the farms, groups of casual laborers, such as college students, were recruited for work in critical harvest seasons, available farm labor was allocated according to need, and farmers were urged to share labor and machinery.

PART SEVEN

RATIONING AND PRICE CONTROL

The proper distribution of a limited supply of raw materials among the various war industries and essential civilian enterprises was certainly one of the most difficult and delicate tasks assumed by the government in the field of war production. Projected upon a still larger scale, this question of allocation involved the armed forces and the nation's subsidies of food and material to our allies. So gigantic and so pervasive were these obligations that the government, for the first time in American history, adopted the weapon of rationing and price control in fighting World War II.

The effort involved regimentation extremely distasteful to Americans but the Federal Government tempered its severity by placing the machinery of enforcement in the hands of the people. No governmental war agency except the civilian defense organization depended upon the voluntary work of as many citizens as did the Office of Price Administration. To the essential but unpopular task of controlling the war economy a host of loyal Hoosiers gave unstintingly of their time and energy.

OFFICE OF PRICE ADMINISTRATION

On April 11, 1941, President Roosevelt signed Executive Order 8734 which created the Office of Price Administration and Civilian Supply (OPACS) within the Office for Emergency Management, "for the purpose of avoiding profiteering and unwarranted price rises, and of facilitating an adequate supply and the equitable distribution of materials and commodities for civilian use . . ."<sup>1</sup>

This agency became the Office of Price Administration (OPA) by Executive Order 8875 in August, and received Congressional sanction in January, 1942, with the passage of the Emergency Price Control Act. The purposes of the OPA, as enumerated in the act, were to "stabilize prices and to prevent speculative, unwarranted, and abnormal increases in prices and rents; to eliminate and prevent profiteering, hoarding, manipulation, speculation, and other disruptive practices resulting from abnormal market conditions or scarcities caused by or contributing to the national emergency; to assure that defense appropriations are not dissipated by excessive prices; to protect persons with relatively fixed and limited incomes, consumers, wage earners, investors, and persons dependent on life insurance, annuities, and pensions, from undue impairment of their standard of living; to prevent hardships to persons engaged in business, to schools, universities, and other institutions, and to the Federal, State, and local governments, which would result from abnormal increases in prices; to assist in securing adequate production of commodities and facilities; to prevent a post-emergency collapse of values; to stabilize agricultural prices . . .; and to permit voluntary co-operation between the Government and producers, processors, and others to accomplish the aforesaid purposes . . ."<sup>2</sup>

Rationing actually began in Indiana on December 11, 1941, when Donald Nelson, director of priorities in the Office of Production Management, issued his memorable order for the "freezing" of rubber tires. In conformity with this order, Governor Schricker appointed James D. Strickland to the position of State Tire Rationing Administrator on December 22. Until May 4, 1942, Mr. Strickland's office was a part of the Indiana Civilian Defense organization.

During this early, embryonic period, the local rationing boards were organized in every county; automobile, type-writer and sugar rationing began; and the state staff was rapidly increased. The Indiana rationing program had from the first been supervised by the Chicago regional office, but in April the state was transferred to Region III, with headquarters at Cleveland. On May 4, the Indianapolis office became a district OPA headquarters with jurisdiction over the entire state. Lake County went back to the Chicago office in January, 1943, and at the same time, seventeen northern Indiana counties were separated from the Indianapolis area and made into a new district with headquarters at South Bend. In October, however, the South Bend District was reabsorbed into the Indianapolis District, which thenceforth included the whole state of Indiana, with the exception of Lake County, until the demise of OPA.<sup>3</sup>

Between May 1, 1942, and December 1, 1943, gasoline, bicycles, rubber footwear, fuel oil, coffee, stoves, shoes, meats, fats, processed foods, jams, jellies, and fruit butters were added to the list of rationed commodities. With the exception of coffee, these remained subject to rationing regulations for the duration. With the surrender of Japan, however, ration controls were rapidly lifted until, by January 5, 1947, sugar alone remained on the rationed list. After January 1, 1946, the OPA District Offices, which had been concerned locally with price control since March, 1942, concentrated most of their efforts in this direction. Under the terms of the OPA bill passed in July, 1946, a Decontrol Board systematically removed commodities from price control until, by November 10, sugar, rice, sirups and rents alone remained on the list. All local boards were officially closed on November 4, and district offices were ordered to liquidate their affairs by January 31, 1947. OPA was combined with a number of other agencies in the Office of Temporary Controls in December, 1946, and its remaining functions were successively transferred to more permanent agencies before it was terminated on June 1, 1947.<sup>4</sup>

Since the functions of the district office were constantly growing and changing and since experience recommended many alterations of method, the organization of the office staff was in a condition of continuous flux. Many of the staff members held several positions and transferred frequently from one department to another. The relations between the various departments were constantly changing. Due to the impossibility of showing this fluctuating organization schematically, the form followed below is that of the organization at the height of its activities in 1945. Earlier and later positions for some individuals are indicated, but those who changed functions frequently are listed under a general designation, together with the entire period of service.

The principal function of the district offices, of course, was to act as the necessary intermediary between the national OPA and the local boards, where the brunt of the battle was borne. However, a considerable degree of autonomy was exercised by the district offices in such matters as the issue of area pricing orders, readjustments in hardship cases, inspection and enforcement, and the supervision of local boards. In the following roster, only the names of individuals who exercised a considerable degree of authority are listed. Lack of space prevents the inclusion of a great many employees with less discretionary power. The dates for period of service are derived from such former OPA records as are now open to public inspection, and are therefore necessarily only approximate. Titles in the "Position" column are those formally designated by the Civil Service Commission. The duties of each administrative division are generally indicated by the titles—to detail them more specifically would involve explanations too complicated for the space available here.<sup>5</sup>

SOUTH BEND DISTRICT OFFICE

The District Office at South Bend was first established as a branch of the Indianapolis District Office on October 1, 1942. On January 1, 1943, it became a full-fledged district office with seventeen counties in northern Indiana under its jurisdiction.<sup>19</sup> The office closed on October 1, 1943, although a field station in South Bend and another in Fort Wayne continued to supervise local boards in the northern area under the general oversight of the Indianapolis office.

WAR PRICE AND RATIONING BOARDS

OPA came into every Indiana community in January, 1942, when local ration boards were appointed to administer the tire rationing program. The original 99 boards (one for each county plus one additional board in Lawrence and six in Lake) were nearly all composed of three members, recruited by the county civilian defense directors. The number of boards and independent panels later increased to nearly 140,<sup>1</sup> and then diminished as consolidation took place during the last months of the program.

As more items were rationed, the boards grew in size, remaining roughly proportional to the population of the communities which they served. The widest variety of practices prevailed in local board organizations in Indiana. Some counties with large populations remained under the control of a single board throughout the war; others multiplied the number of their boards. Most boards were geographical in jurisdiction but some were organized on a functional basis, dealing exclusively with the administration of a particular program throughout an area which might overlap the general jurisdiction of several other boards. Special boards or panels had to be organized in some cases to serve an ordnance plant, a training camp, or an isolated institution. Members of some boards retained a very general jurisdiction while those of others served only on a particular panel. The typical board, perhaps, was one in which a separate panel for each of the more important rationed items, a price panel, an information panel, and such miscellaneous officials as Volunteer Assistants Supervisors, Distribution Agents, and Community Service Officers made up the membership.

Price panels of War Price and Rationing Boards assisted in the administration of regulations affecting retail prices. Rationing panels determined the classification and eligibility of applicants for purchase orders and coupon books in the various rationing programs—automobiles, tires, gasoline, sugar, processed foods, shoes, typewriters, bicycles, meat, etc. Information panels served local communities by providing easily accessible centers of information on OPA programs, engaging in various activities to inform consumers and retailers on how these programs operated, and reporting the problems of local communities to district and regional offices.

These were the sworn-in members of OPA boards, whose names, so far as they could be gathered, are listed below. They served for many hours, without pay, in a task which was frequently distasteful. It is worth noting that at least thirty board chairmen and a good many other members served continuously throughout the five years of the price control program. However, the board members were only a small proportion of the number of volunteers who donated their services to OPA. Public school teachers who registered consumers for the first sugar coupons, clerks and stenographers who assisted in the gigantic task of mailing out the third rationing book from district offices, members of plant transportation committees who recommended the allocation of tires and gasoline to their fellow workers, and volunteers available for any type of rush activity—these were among the 77,000 people engaged in some kind of OPA activity in Indiana. This number also includes the compensated personnel—the clerks of the various panels who did the major part of OPA's work in the local communities. Many of the clerks in Indiana served throughout the price and rationing program with loyalty and devotion. However, in conformity with the practice of listing only directive personnel in this Directory, the names of purely volunteer workers and of most compensated employees are omitted from the following lists. Rosters printed in this section will be confined to sworn-in board members and chief clerks.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> A brief statement of the research methods used in gathering data for the War Price and Rationing Board membership rosters in this Directory may help to explain their deficiencies. The one basic and unfortunate fact is that none of them were obtained, except in a small degree, from reliable official records, if these can actually be said ever to have existed. Volunteer membership records were not accurately kept by the clerks of local boards, and were certainly not scrupulously reported to the district office. Such records of this nature as survived the "weeding out" process at the end of the war were finally destroyed at Washington, since volunteer members had acquired no rights "which require long-time preservation of their service records." (Notification of Congressional Authorization for Disposal of Records, National Archives, Form 70, Disposal Job 347-S20.) Consequently, no official records of voluntary board membership lists remain in existence. Those printed in this Directory are the best substitute attainable.

Early in January, 1945, the Indianapolis District Office furnished the War History Commission with a list of all members of Indiana boards (except Lake County) then active, and another list of all former members. These rosters contained no information other than the members' names, and in many cases they were found to be inaccurate. However, they formed the basis of lists which were then sent to the chief clerks of all the extant boards in Indiana with the request that additional information and corrections be furnished. Replies of varying quality were received from 82 local boards; very few of these gave all of the desired information. The data compiled in this way was supplemented by the scanty notices of local board activity printed in the newspapers, by the brief lists of chairmen found in the civilian defense manuals, and by the official change of membership memoranda sent to the District Office after January 1, 1945. A vigorous effort to solicit additional data from local sources by mail, considerably handicapped by the fact that the boards had been out of existence for two years, was made again in 1948. Finally, a few stray tid-bits of information, particularly in regard to the Lake County boards, were found in the OPA records retained by the National Archives. The final result, as it appears on the following pages, is in most cases a combination of semi-official record, careful guessing, and compromise between conflicting reports. It is probably most accurate in regard to names, much less so in regard to panel memberships, and least so in reference to dates, especially before January 1, 1945.

The wide differences in the amount and accuracy of the information available from board to board, and the varieties of organization within the boards themselves, have made it seem desirable to vary the format in which the local boards are presented. The resulting loss of uniformity may be balanced by a saving of space and a more accurate presentation.

ADAMS COUNTY—BOARD 31.1

Board 31.1 was located at Decatur throughout the OPA program. It became a Price Control Board on January 1, 1946, and Board 31.90 (Wells County) was consolidated with it on September 12, 1946.<sup>3</sup>

ALLEN COUNTY

The original Allen County rationing board was divided, in June, 1943, into three War Price and Rationing Boards, each serving an assigned territory, but all under the general chairmanship of R. Nelson Snider, Principal of the South Side High School. In July, it was found desirable to create a central war plant area board, thus giving Allen County four separate boards. All price panels were consolidated, in 1944, into a single, independent price panel which was considered a part of Board 31.2-1. On April 2, 1945, the four boards were reconsolidated into a single rationing board, although the price panel remained in a separate office. After January 1, 1946, this panel became the Price Control Board for Allen County, and on September 10, its jurisdiction was extended over Whitley County by the consolidation of Board 31.92.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>5</sup> See p. 763. In communities such as Fort Wayne, where several War Price and Rationing Boards were organized, transfers of personnel—especially from the original board to the new boards when they were set up, and back again when reconsolidations took place—were numerous. To avoid a considerable repetition of names in such cases (see also Marion County, Vanderburgh County, etc.) individuals will usually be listed only with the board to which they gave the most important service, and transfers will be indicated by footnotes. The dates in the period of service column, however, will indicate

BOARD 31.2-4. FORT WAYNE

This was a central war plant area board, formed to handle tire, gasoline, automobile, and bicycle applications from about 55,000 persons employed in Allen County's war industries, thus relieving some of the congestion in the three regular rationing offices. It met for the first time on July 20, 1943. When the boards were reconsolidated in 1945, this board continued as a special panel in Board 31.2 until the end of rationing.<sup>7</sup>

BARTHOLOMEW COUNTY—BOARD 31.3

The Bartholomew County War Price and Rationing Board had not only the greatly expanded industrial population of Columbus to serve, but also, after November 1, 1942, handled rationing for much of the civilian and military personnel at Camp Atterbury. Board 31.3 became a Price Control Board on January 1, 1946, for Bartholomew County. Brown and Jennings Counties were added to its jurisdiction by consolidation with Board 31.7 in November, 1945, and with Board 31.40 in December, 1945.<sup>8</sup>

CLARK COUNTY

Tire rationing began under Board 31.10-1, which continued to serve the residents of Clark County as their general rationing and price board until the end of the program. It was soon found necessary to establish special transportation boards for the Hoosier Ordnance Works at Charlestown, and for the Jeffersonville Quartermaster Depot. These special boards were reconsolidated with Board 31.10-1 by order of August 28, 1945. The Jeffersonville board's jurisdiction was expanded over Floyd and Harrison counties by consolidation on August 31, 1946.<sup>14</sup>

ELKHART COUNTY

The Elkhart County Tire Rationing Board was established in Elkhart on January 4, 1942. In July, the pressure of the rationing program necessitated the creation of another board at Goshen to serve the southern part of the country. These boards continued to exist until September 12, 1946, when the Goshen board was dissolved. Thereafter, price control centered in the Elkhart board until the end of the program.

GREENE COUNTY

The Greene County tire rationing board, which was set up at Bloomfield on January 5, 1942, subsequently became War Price and Rationing Board 31.28-1. Board 31.28-2 opened at Linton in June, 1942. On October 1, 1945, the two boards were consolidated, with quarters at Linton, although the Bloomfield tire panel continued to operate until October 31. The Linton board, now numbered 31.28, continued as the Greene County Price Control Board until the end of OPA.

JEFFERSON COUNTY—BOARD 31.39

Two boards, in effect, were established in Jefferson County at the beginning of rationing. The Jefferson County board was located in Madison, while a special panel at the Jefferson Proving Ground serviced the applications of employees there for tires and, later, gasoline. This special panel was dissolved in June, 1944, and its work taken over by the Madison board. On November 9, 1945, Boards 31.72 (Scott County) and 31.78 (Switzerland County) were consolidated with the Madison board which served as a Price Control Board for the three counties until the end of OPA.<sup>51</sup>

JOHNSON COUNTY

The original tire rationing board in Johnson County, located at Franklin, became War Price and Rationing Board 31.41-1, then Price Control Board 31.41, and served until the end of OPA. For ten months in 1942, a second board, 31.41-2, with headquarters at Edinburg, took care of transportation rationing at Camp Atterbury. After November 1, 1942, this was done by the regular boards at Franklin, Columbus, and elsewhere.

LAKE COUNTY

Prior to January 1, 1943, Lake County was under the jurisdiction of the Indianapolis District OPA office. On that date it was separated from the remainder of Indiana and placed under the Chicago Metropolitan District Office. There were nine local War Price and Rationing Boards functioning in Lake County at that time, and eight of them continued to exist until after the end of the war.<sup>55</sup> Consolidations were then effected and after January 1, 1946, only two Price Control Boards, at Gary and at Hammond, remained in the county. A sub-board of the Gary Price Control Board operated at Crown Point. These boards continued to exist until the end of the price control program. The OPA officials in immediate control of the boards in Lake County are listed below.

LA PORTE COUNTY

The La Porte County Tire Rationing Board was established in Michigan City in January, 1942. Eventually this became War Price and Rationing Board 31.46-1, and remained as the Price Control Board for La Porte County until the end of OPA. Board 31.46-2 was established at the Kingsbury Ordnance Plant in February, 1942, to handle transportation rationing certificates for employees, but it was discontinued on November 1. Board 31.46-3, created at LaPorte in April, 1943, handled rationing and price control for the southern part of the county until June 30, 1946, when it was consolidated with Board 31.46-1.

LAWRENCE COUNTY

Two tire rationing boards, 31.47-1 in Bedford, and 31.47-2 in Mitchell, were organized at the very beginning of the rationing program. A third was soon added in Bedford to handle tire rationing for workers at the Burns City (later Crane) Naval Ammunition Depot. This board, 31.47-3, was discontinued on November 1, 1942. In September 1945, the Mitchell board was consolidated with Board 31.47-1, which continued as the Price Control Board of Lawrence County until the end of OPA. Martin County was added to the territory of Board 31.47 on July 23, 1946.<sup>67</sup>

MADISON COUNTY

The original Tire Rationing Board for Madison County was set up in Anderson early in January, 1942. After the organization of other boards in the county, the Anderson board became 31.48-1, and continued as the Price Control Board until the end of OPA. Board 48-2 was established in Elwood on July 15, 1942, and reconsolidated with 48-1 on September 30, 1945. In April, 1943, Board 48-2-S was inaugurated in Alexandria as a special panel of the Elwood board, later becoming an independent board, 48-3. It was joined with Board 48-1 on October 9, 1945.

MARION COUNTY

Shortly after the rationing program began to extend beyond the allocation of tires and automobiles, new War Price and Rationing Boards were added to the original tire board and given jurisdiction over particular areas of Indianapolis and Marion County. This multiplication process, partly deliberate and partly improvised, proceeded until there were ten such local boards, all under the general supervision of Alexander L. Taggart as Marion County Rationing Administrator. Then a consolidation program was adopted, by which the ten boards were reduced to five, and these remained in existence until the virtual end of rationing.

In addition to the local War Price and Rationing Boards, which were similar in organization and authority to those elsewhere in the state, the Marion County rationing administration organized three special boards with a county-wide jurisdiction—a Transportation Board, a Commercial Food Panel, and a Price Board. The latter continued as the Price Control Board for Marion County after all other boards had been dissolved. Hancock and Hendricks counties were added to its jurisdiction after the dissolution of their respective boards.<sup>70</sup>

BOARD 31.49-12

This was the Marion County price board, created in March, 1944, to centralize price control, which previously had been handled by price panels in the various boards. It became simply Price Control Board 31.49 in 1946, and was given jurisdiction of Hancock and Hendricks counties as well as Marion in September. It functioned until the end of OPA.

ST. JOSEPH COUNTY

Four distinct OPA boards existed at one time in St. Joseph County. The original Tire Rationing Board, in South Bend, became War Price and Rationing Board 31.71-1 after two additional boards, subordinate to it, were created on August 5, 1942. Board 31.71-2, also in South Bend, took over the western part of the county until February 12, 1945. In the same fashion, Board 31.71-3, at Mishawaka, served four townships with 50,000 people in the eastern part of the county until September 30, 1945. Board 31.71-4 was a War Plant Transportation Board, which—from December 1, 1943 to September, 1945—processed the applications of workers in the county's larger war production plants for tires and gasoline. Eventually, all of the St. Joseph County boards were merged with 31.71-1, which continued as the Price Control Board for St. Joseph County after January 1, 1946, and served Kosciusko and Marshall Counties as well after September 10, 1946.<sup>96</sup>

VANDERBURGH COUNTY

Five separate boards were required to serve the large population of Vanderburgh County. The original tire rationing board became War Price and Rationing Board 31.82-1, which remained in existence until the end of OPA. Two more War Price and Rationing Boards, a special Plant Area Board, and a so-called Tri-State Commercial Food Board were later organized and eventually either reconsolidated with Board 82-1, or abolished. After January 1, 1946, Board 82-1 became Price Control Board 31.82 for Vanderburgh County. In June, Posey and Warrick counties were added to its jurisdiction, and in September, Gibson County came under its control.<sup>9</sup>

BOARD 31.82-2. EVANSVILLE<sup>10</sup>

Three separate rationing boards were established in Evansville in the spring of 1942, but they were not given separate headquarters nor assigned to separate territories until October. Board 82-2 served the "East Side" of Evansville and adjoining townships until August 9, 1943, when it was reconsolidated with Board 82-1.

BOARD 31.82-2 (PAB). EVANSVILLE<sup>12</sup>

This board was a Plant Area Transportation Board, organized in August, 1943, just after the original Board 82-2 had been abolished, and therefore given the same number. Applications for tires, gasoline, automobiles, bicycles, and typewriters were forwarded to it, after approval by the Plant Transportation Committees in Evansville's war industries. Workers residing in 31 "Tri-State" counties were served by this board until it was closed on September 1, 1945.

VERMILLION COUNTY

The three boards in Vermillion County were closely related. The original tire board became War Price and Rationing Board 83-1, and remained in existence at Clinton throughout the course of rationing and price control. For a few months in 1942 a separate Tire Board, 83-2, was maintained at the Wabash River Ordnance Works to act upon the applications of the plant workers. This panel, which reported to Board 83-1, was discontinued in November. In July, 1943, an additional board was authorized for the northern part of the county and established at Cayuga, again as Board 83-2. On September 30, 1945, this board was reconsolidated with Board 83-1 and six of its members were transferred to the Price Panel. The Clinton board became Price Control Board 31.83 on January 1, 1946, and its jurisdiction was extended over Parke County when Board 31.61 was consolidated with it on December 1, 1945.<sup>15</sup>

VIGO COUNTY

For a brief time, two War Price and Rationing Boards existed in Vigo County. The original tire rationing board became Board 31.84-1, and then Price Control Board 31.84 after January 1, 1946. After June 30, it had jurisdiction over Clay and Sullivan counties as well as Vigo.<sup>16</sup> Between October, 1942 and February, 1943, a second rationing board, 31.84-2, handled tire, automobile, and sugar rationing for the population living north of U.S. Route 40. After February, 1943, Board 84-1 resumed control of all rationing in the county. A Commercial Food Panel, which handled applications from industrial and institutional consumers in eleven Western Indiana counties, was added to Board 31.84 for six months in 1945.

INDIANA RENT CONTROL

Rent Control was devised primarily for the purpose of preventing detrimental inflation in rents paid by war plant workers and their dependents. Consequently it applied only to limited areas where defense plants and, later, war production factories were concentrated. Forty-five of the ninety-two Indiana counties came under rent control at one time or another between 1941 and 1947.<sup>1</sup>

The several Area Rent Offices established in Indiana were originally supervised directly from the Cleveland Regional Office. In October, 1943, the Indianapolis District Office began to assume more responsibility for the co-ordination of rent control in the state. After August, 1945, this supervision became a definite function of the district office. With the end of OPA, local rent control offices continued to function under the direction of the Office of Temporary Controls, and later, under the Office of the Housing Expediter.

Administration of rent regulations involved registering the property of all landlords at the beginning of the program, publicizing the decisions made in the higher offices, hearing complaints of tenants and landlords, enforcing obedience to the regulations, and granting adjustments in individual cases. The functions of each of the officers listed below were implicit in their titles. As is customary in this volume, only the directive personnel of each office is listed.

INDIANAPOLIS DISTRICT AND AREA RENT OFFICE

The Indianapolis Area rent control office opened its doors on July 1, 1942, to serve the people of Marion County. In 1943 the rent office became an integral part of the Indianapolis District OPA office, and in 1945 it was designated a District Rent Office. Wayne and Fayette counties were made a controlled area in December, 1942, and were administered by the Indianapolis office through a branch office in Richmond.

TERRE HAUTE AREA RENT OFFICE

The Terre Haute office, originally controlling Vigo County, opened in October, 1942. An office administering rent control in Indiana's Parke and Vermillion counties, and in Illinois' Edgar and Vermillion counties, had been established at Clinton, Indiana, on September 1, 1942. These offices merged on August 1, 1943, at which time Vermillion County, Illinois, was detached from the Terre Haute area.

OFFICE OF DEFENSE TRANSPORTATION

The Office of Defense Transportation was established in the Office for Emergency Management by Executive Order 8989, of December 18, 1941, in order to "define further the functions and duties of the Office for Emergency Management with respect to the state of war and to assure maximum utilization of the domestic transportation facilities of the Nation for the successful prosecution of the war."<sup>1</sup>

Among its manifold activities, the one carried on at a local level which required intrastate administration was that of determining the mileage requirements of commercial vehicles. This was done by the Motor Transport Division, which issued certificates of war necessity to all commercial motor vehicles engaged in commodity transportation, determining the number of miles each vehicle should be permitted to run during a given period and the amount of gasoline it could receive from the rationing board. As directed by the Division of Local Transportation it also issued such certificates to all passenger carrier motor vehicles. To carry out this program, the Division maintained 142 district offices throughout the United States, supervised by nine regional offices.

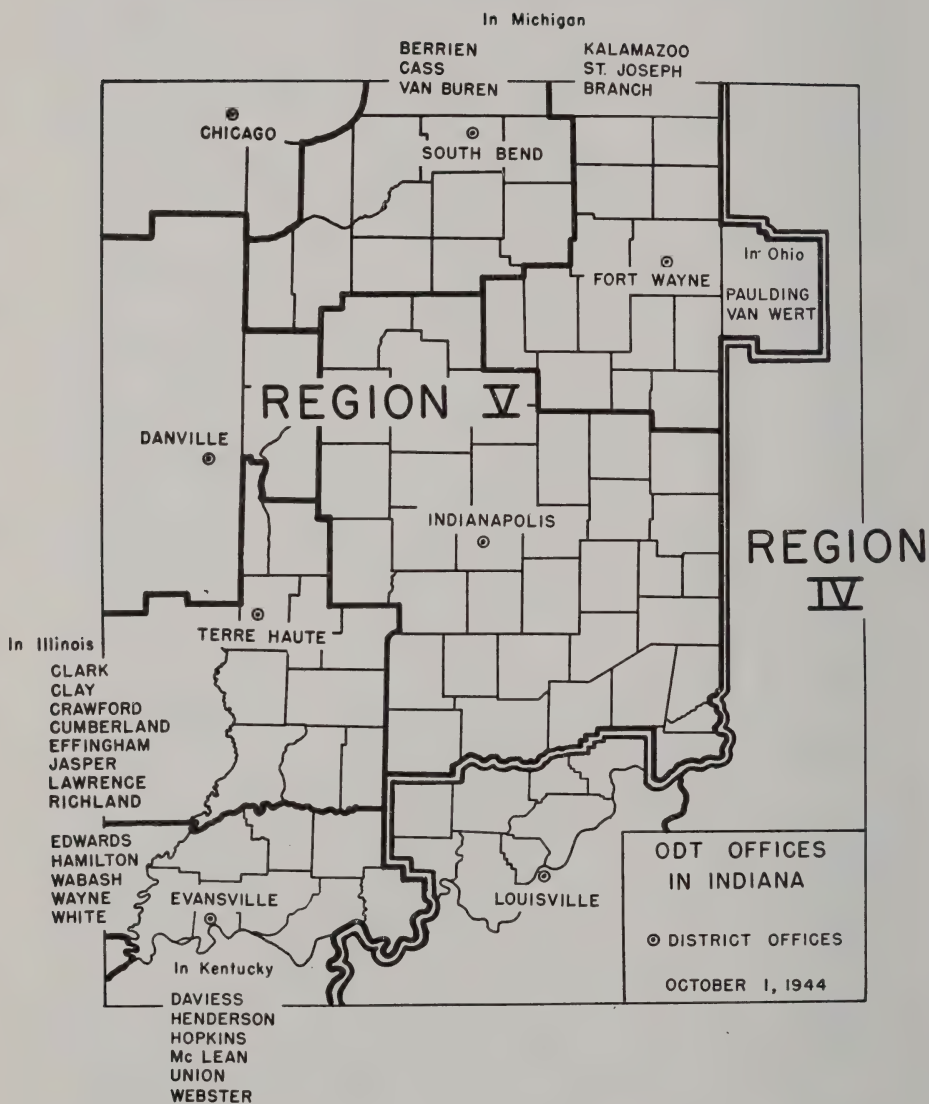

The counties in Indiana were parcelled among eight different district offices, three of them located outside the state. The jurisdiction of these district offices as of October 1, 1944, is shown on the map, p. 774. It will be seen that all of the state except eight counties under the Louisville office belonged to Region 5 with headquarters in Chicago. On October 15, 1944, regional boundaries were changed in such a way as to bring all of Indiana except Lake County under the jurisdiction of the Cleveland office (Region 4). The ODT offices at Evansville, Fort Wayne, and South Bend became field offices under the supervision of the Indianapolis District Office.

On June 1, 1944, the Division of Local Transportation and the Motor Transport Division were consolidated into the newly created Highway Transport Department, which administered and enforced all ODT orders locally, including the allocation of new commercial motor vehicles. The end of gasoline rationing removed the major necessity for the existence of the Highway Transport Department, and the field offices closed by the end of October, 1945. Liquidation of the Office of Defense Transportation was completed on June 30, 1946.

As in the case of OPA, much assistance was rendered ODT by volunteer farm and industry transportation committees. Unfortunately it has been impossible to obtain complete lists of the membership of these committees for inclusion in this volume. The personnel listed below is confined to the administrative officials of the district offices located in the state.

INDIANAPOLIS DISTRICT OFFICE

The Indianapolis office, opened on April 13, 1942, as a field office of the Division of Motor Transport, became a District office in October, with jurisdiction over 37 counties in central and southeastern Indiana. After October 15, 1944, it became the district office for all of the state except Lake County, exercising supervision through field offices in Evansville, Fort Wayne, and South Bend.

TRUCK, TRAILER, AND TRACTOR RATIONING

Prior to July 1, 1944, rationing of new motor trucks, truck tractors, and trailers was conducted by special field offices of ODT, which were also offices of the Bureau of Motor Carriers of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Field offices in Indianapolis, Fort Wayne, and Louisville, Ky., served Indiana communities. After July 1, 1944, the allocation of all new commercial vehicles was placed in the hands of the district Highway Transport Department offices.

INDIANA WAR TRANSPORTATION CONSERVATION PROGRAM

At the request of Joseph B. Eastman, Director of the Office of Defense Transportation, War Transportation Conservation programs were inaugurated by the mayors of many Indiana cities soon after the country entered the war. One of the earliest and most successful plans, that of South Bend-Mishawaka, became a model for later ones. Governor Schricker organized the program on a state level by designating the Governor's Co-Ordinating Safety Committee as the state agency to guide and supervise the City War Transportation Committees.

The State Safety Committee named the Chairman of the State Highway Commission as State Administrator for the program and the Director of the Traffic Department as State Executive Officer. They were aided in their work by a State Technical Advisory Group made up of experts from state agencies whose activities impinged upon the problem of traffic regulation. Indiana cities were encouraged to follow this state pattern in organizing their transportation conservation programs. In so doing they placed the principal responsibility upon mayors, police officers, street department engineers, and traffic control experts.

The official War Transportation Conservation Program for Indiana embraced four projects: (1) Staggered Hours (to produce a more efficient use of mass transportation facilities); (2) Swap-Ride or Car Pool (to lengthen the life expectancy of private passenger cars); (3) Better Use of Streets (to promote more efficient traffic patterns on city streets); (4) Speed Reduction (to reduce fatal accidents and conserve tires and gasoline by reduced speeds on the state highways). These projects were carried out vigorously by a wide variety of methods in the areas of Indiana where traffic control was an important adjunct to the war effort.

In Washington, the Highway Traffic Advisory Committee to the War Department, the Office of Defense Transportation, the Office of Civilian Defense, the Office of Price Administration and the Department of Agriculture united their efforts, early in 1943, to promote the most economical use of all automotive transportation on city streets, state highways, and rural roads. As gasoline rationing became more restrictive and Plant Transportation Committees were organized in every large war industry, the transportation conservation program came to be primarily the concern of OPA, and the War Transportation Committees retained only advisory functions.

TRANSPORTATION OFFICERS

Early in 1943, the Office of Defense Transportation asked county Civilian Defense Directors to suggest the names of persons who might be appointed as County Transportation Officers with the responsibility of surveying all local automotive equipment and taking charge of its dispatch to other communities in case of serious emergencies. Some time after this, the State Civilian Defense Council and the Fifth Service Command of the U. S. Army agreed upon a general plan for the emergency control of transportation, and a state-wide organization for this purpose was effected. Frank T. Millis, Assistant State Director of OCD, was appointed to head this function and he named a committee consisting of officers from the state police force and the state highway commission to devise the original plans. Approximately one-fourth of the counties in the state named County Transportation Officers under one or the other of these plans. Fortunately for Indiana, the emergencies which this organization was designed to meet never occurred.

DAIRY TRANSPORTATION COMMITTEE

Soon after the Office of Defense Transportation was established, a request was made to the dairy industry to set up state advisory committees to suggest changes and reallocations in milk collecting routes for the purpose of saving tires and gasoline on milk trucks. Without further urging, a group of men representing the different phases of Indiana's dairy industry met in July, 1942, and appointed such a committee. At its first meeting, on July 13, this advisory committee adopted a number of suggestions and selected five of its number as a working committee. These two groups initiated a state survey of milk routes, adopted a series of suggested improvements in the system, and sponsored a detailed study of the Muncie milk shed for experimental purposes.

In the meantime, the Washington office of ODT had worked out a general plan for milk transportation conservation to be adapted to each regional situation by a local committee composed of an equal number of plant operators, producers, haulers, and administrators. Since the existing advisory committee had not been selected in this fashion, it was dissolved and a new Ways and Means Committee was selected at a meeting of representatives from the dairy industry on November 6, 1942. Continuing with the work which the earlier advisory committee had begun, this new committee developed many plans for greater efficiency in milk hauling and secured a high degree of voluntary co-operation from Indiana producers, haulers, and distributors.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION

The Indiana Public Service Commission exercises regulatory authority over the services and rates of public utilities and public transportation agencies in the state, particularly over those intra-state systems which do not come within the jurisdiction of federal agencies. Its duties include the regulation of rates charged by electric, water, gas, telephone, and heat utilities; regulation of intra-state railroad rates and administration of safety laws affecting railroads; the issuance of permits for the operation of motor vehicles for-hire and the regulation of intra-state motor vehicle for-hire rates.

These activities brought the Public Service Commission into direct contact with many of the war's most serious civilian problems. By close co-operation with the Office of Defense Transportation, the War Production Board, and the Office of Price Administration, it was able to help the state's public utilities render effective assistance to the war effort.

The Commission consists of three members, appointed by the Governor, for four year terms. The Chairman of the Commission is the executive head of the office staff which is organized in several operating divisions to handle the various duties incumbent upon the Commission.

PART EIGHT
WAR FINANCE

The sinews of war are human, mechanical, and financial—these three—and not the least of these is the latter. Provision of the incredible sums of money demanded by war has never been an easy task—in World War II it assumed gigantic proportions. During the years of actual warfare, 1940 to 1946, the United States government spent three hundred and forty-six billion dollars for war and the aftermath of war. Forty percent of this sum was raised by taxation, the remainder by borrowing. To these enormous totals, the citizens of Indiana contributed nearly two and three-quarter billion dollars in taxes and close to four billion dollars in the purchase of bonds.

It is, of course, impossible in this book to give due recognition to the ultimate heroes of war finance, the taxpayer and the bond-buyer. The following pages are necessarily devoted to perpetuating the record of the tax-collectors and the bond-sellers. The former were government employees whose tasks were severely increased by the war but among the latter was a host of volunteer salesmen (more than 80,000 in Indiana) without whose efforts the war effort would have failed for lack of sustenance. Only the leaders of this tremendous service can be listed in the following pages.

INDIANA WAR FINANCE COMMITTEE

On March 12, 1941, Henry Morgenthau, Jr., Secretary of the Treasury, established a Defense Savings Staff in the Department of the Treasury under the authority of a World War I statute. This staff promoted the nation wide sale of "Defense Bonds and Stamps" through a network of state and local volunteer sales organizations. The Indiana Defense Savings Staff, headed by Will H. Smith, the Collector of Internal Revenue, was appointed in May of 1941. Mr. Smith set about immediately to appoint staff officers, advisory committeemen and county chairmen, many of whom served until after the end of the war.

The name of the Defense Savings Staff was changed to War Savings Staff on April 15, 1942, and shortly thereafter, "Defense Bonds" became "War Savings Bonds." In the meantime, the Treasury Department had established a separate organization, called the Victory Fund Committee, to conduct the First War Loan Drive. The Victory Fund organization was based upon Federal Reserve District boundaries—thus one committee was formed for the 68 northern Indiana counties in the 7th District, and another for the remaining counties in the 8th District. During the Second War Loan Drive, the Victory Fund Committees and the War Savings Staff combined their efforts with such success that the Treasury Department, on June 25, 1943, merged the two organizations nationally into a new War Finance Division. The field organization in the state was then known as the Indiana War Finance Committee.

The organization of the War Finance Committee was relatively simple, with a small compensated staff doing the necessary full-time work, a large number of prominent Hoosiers donating much of their time to the various departments and advisory committees, and literally thousands of volunteer workers in every community engaging in personal solicitation during the great bond drives. Through their concerted efforts, three billion and eighty-five million dollars worth of bonds were sold to Indiana investors.

Volunteer bond-selling activities were channeled through the following divisional organizations:

The Industry Division was responsible for soliciting the large industrial corporations, both domestic and foreign, which did business in Indiana.

The Pay Roll Savings Division secured the co-operation of labor and management in arranging for the regular purchase of bonds through systematic pay roll deductions. Nine out of every ten Hoosiers employed in plants, stores, and offices enrolled in this plan, to give Indiana the best record in the nation.

The Financial Division, organized in 1943, and headed ex officio by each successive president of the Indiana Bankers Association,<sup>1</sup> enlisted the services of Hoosier bankers in the task of securing subscriptions from banks, stock brokers, investment dealers, savings and loan institutions, insurance companies, loan and finance companies, credit unions, and co-operatives.

The Labor Division worked closely with the Pay Roll Savings Division to secure the full co-operation of Indiana labor in the financial support of the war effort. Its activities were centered about the Labor Advisory Committee which included the leaders of Indiana's principal labor organizations.

The Speakers' Bureau organized a corps of 550 persons throughout the state who made themselves available for speaking at war bond rallies and other meetings.

The Agricultural Division was organized in 1942, for the promotion of the sale of war bonds to Hoosier farmers. An Agricultural Advisory Committee, composed of the leaders of Indiana farm organizations, assisted this division.

The Publicity Division, originated early in 1942, was responsible for servicing every available medium of publicity with information about war bond sales. Its personnel was largely compensated and professional, although an advisory council of prominent newspaper and radio men volunteered its services.

The Insurance Division was responsible for soliciting the twelve life insurance companies incorporated in Indiana. The highly successful efforts of this division were made almost entirely by Mr. Paul E. Fisher, its chairman.

The Women's Division, an exceedingly efficient group, not only paralleled the activities of the divisions which dealt more or less exclusively with men, but devised a number of unique projects such as the Million Dollar Luncheon and the publication of the Indiana Bugle, a monthly newsletter. The leaders of Indiana women's organizations formed an Advisory Council in this division, and more than 25,000 women were actively engaged in its day-to-day work.

The Special Events Division originated the great war bond rallies, traveling exhibitions, and spectacular shows which maintained constant public interest in Indiana. This division, headed by a member of the executive staff, was combined with the Publicity Division after July, 1944. In conjunction with the Special Events Division, Professor L. C. Larson of Indiana University worked out a plan for the distribution of 16 mm. films on war related subjects, for showing at plants, clubs, and public meetings. The schools handled these films through their departments of visual education.

The Theatre Division, synonymous with the War Activities Committee of the Motion Picture Industry,<sup>2</sup> was credited with one-third of the bond sales in Indiana.

The Education Division, which was closely connected with the Indiana State Teachers Association<sup>3</sup> and other organizations of professional educators, was formed in 1943, to stimulate the sale of war bonds and stamps in the public and parochial schools of the state. By means of a very effective program, this division accounted for total sales of nearly $19,000,000 through the schools.

The public libraries, retail stores, newspapers, postmasters, chambers of commerce, patriotic organizations, civic clubs, and educational institutions of the state were represented on the state committee, and performed the services which each was peculiarly qualified to undertake. Many of these divisions described above were organized on a county or city basis all over the state. Unfortunately, only the names of the county chairmen, the Women's Division representatives, and the chairmen of the Financial Division have been preserved with any degree of thoroughness in the records, and are accordingly listed in the section on local organizations.

After the dissolution of the War Finance Division on January 1, 1946, a United States Savings Bond Division was established to continue the plan of offering federal securities to the general public through pay roll savings plans and other convenient methods. The very much simplified state organization which carried this work through 1946 is included in this section.

The roster below follows the scheme of organization used by the War Finance Committee at the height of its activity in 1945. To avoid excessive duplications of names, however, the positions occupied by each individual in the Defense Savings Staff (DSS), the War Savings Staff (WSS), the Victory Fund Committee (VFC), and the United States Savings Bond Division (USSBD) are worked in at the same time, in chronological order whenever possible. These changes of nomenclature are ignored in the county organizations, which remained essentially the same throughout the entire period.

INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE

Federal tax collections in Indiana increased from a little more than $175 million in 1940-41, to more than $928 million in 1944-45. The increase in such tax returns as those on corporate and individual incomes was spectacular, amounting in the latter case to 2,479 percent.<sup>1</sup> Liquor taxes, estates taxes, and a host of new excise duties were responsible for other large portions of the state's total federal tax bill. The Internal Revenue Service had not only to handle these increased collections but to administer the new withholding tax machinery, to supervise the stabilization of salaries in excess of $5,000, and to organize the early campaigns for the sale of Defense Bonds and Stamps.

The field service for the Bureau of Internal Revenue operates through five Divisions, each of which maintains a separate office in Indianapolis having jurisdiction over all or nearly all of the State of Indiana. Three of the Divisions also have branch offices throughout the state. The Collector's Office is responsible for collecting all internal taxes and for enforcing the tax laws except those which deal with certain income tax returns. The Income Tax Unit examines the bulk of the income, excess profits, estate, and gift tax returns and attempts to settle disagreements with taxpayers over the extent of their liability. Such cases may be further appealed to the Technical Staff, which presents them to the Tax Court when settlements cannot be reached. The Alcohol Tax Unit enforces federal liquor regulations, and the Intelligence Unit assists the others in investigating suspected criminal offenses against the internal revenue laws.

STATE AND LOCAL TAXATION

The annual tax bill for state and local governments in Indiana increased by twenty-six percent during the war years although these political units could not find expenditure outlets for all of their money. This augmentation of governmental income was a reflection of wartime prosperity rather than of higher taxes since some tax rates were actually decreased. It was furthermore accompanied by a considerable change in the fiscal pattern. Property taxes, which had at an earlier day been the principal source of state revenue, furnished less than five percent of the state's income in 1945, while the returns from the gross income tax had doubled during the war period and provided nearly thirty-two percent of the whole. Other taxes and fees which war conditions made more productive were those on alcoholic beverages, inheritances and insurance. Although continuing to be a very large item in state receipts, motor vehicle taxes declined because of gasoline rationing, and both the interest on invested funds and the amount received in federal aid were less in 1945 than in 1940. Receipts from property taxes and fees, which increased from 98 to 109 million during the war years, continued to provide almost the entire income of local governmental units, aside from state and federal aid. The only important change in local public finance resulting from the war was a happy tendency to apply increased revenues to the reduction of bonded indebtedness.

The state agencies which administered, supervised and controlled the state's fiscal system were, at the outbreak of the war, the result of historical accretion rather than of logical arrangement. Although the Treasurer of State had the general responsibility of safeguarding state funds and the Auditor of State that of approving expenditures, taxes were collected, funds maintained and records audited by a number of different departments, boards and officials. The most important of these during the war years are listed below.

STATE BOARD OF TAX COMMISSIONERS

This board, consisting of three full-time commissioners appointed by the Governor, has supervision over and a limited administration of the Indiana property tax structure, including inheritance and intangibles taxes. It serves as the court of last resort in reviewing the budgets, property assessments and tax levies of local governmental units, and it fixes the assessed valuation of all public utilities. The board employs a staff of some fifty persons to conduct its routine work.

GROSS INCOME TAX DIVISION

During the war, this division, which administered the Indiana Income Tax Law of 1933<sup>1</sup>, functioned as an independent unit of the government. The Governor was permitted to appoint the Treasurer of State as Director of the division and did so in 1945. Prior to this there was no personal connection with other departments. The division administered the gross income tax laws and collected the taxes which ranged from a quarter of one percent on gross income from farm products to one percent on salaries, wages and commissions. Tax collections increased from $23,648,497 in 1939-40 to $46,331,680 in 1944-45, principally due to an increase in the number of taxpayers from 763,464 to 1,287,104.

ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES COMMISSION

The third largest source of state funds, aside from federal aid, derives from the excise taxes on all alcoholic beverages sold within the state and the license fees paid by the manufacturers and dispensers of beer and spiritous liquors. The laws taxing and regulating the liquor business are administered by the Alcoholic Beverages Commission, consisting of four members appointed by the Governor. During the war, the designated chairman of the Commission also served as excise administrator of the Alcoholic Beverages Division within the Executive Department.

During the abnormal social conditions of the war period, especially in the neighborhood of military training camps and in the booming industrial communities, the regulatory functions of the Alcoholic Beverages Commission were especially important. Vigorous efforts were made to enforce the temperance provisions of the state liquor laws.

MOTOR VEHICLE TAXES

Indiana automobile owners provided approximately a quarter of the state's income during the war period by paying a variety of taxes and fees connected with the licensing and operating of motor vehicles. Most productive of these sources of income was the gasoline tax, collected by the Motor Vehicle Fuel Division in the office of the Auditor of State. In spite of gasoline rationing, receipts from the tax declined only from $27,137,265 in 1940-41, to $20,421,127 in 1943-44, and returned almost to normal in the last year of the war. In addition, automobile license fees, driver's license fees and other fees collected by the Bureau of Motor Vehicles in the office of the Secretary of State provided approximately forty-five million dollars for the four full years of the war.

DISBURSING AGENCIES

The Second World War was financed entirely by the Federal Government. Except for the support of the civilian defense organization, the State Guard and a few other civilian agencies involved in war work, state and local governmental expenditures were affected incidentally rather than directly by the war. State disbursing machinery was strained by manpower shortages and added work but it was not greatly altered during the war years.

The Treasurer of State receives and pays out state funds on warrants issued by the Auditor of State. General advisory supervision over this machinery as well as over the investment of certain state funds is maintained by the State Board of Finance, an ex officio body composed of the Governor, the Auditor of State and the Treasurer of State.<sup>1</sup> Another ex officio agency, the Board for Public Depositories, composed of the Governor, Treasurer, Auditor, State Examiner and Chairman of the Commission for Financial Institutions, selects the banks in which state funds are deposited and supervises the administration of a Public Deposits Insurance Fund.

STATE BUDGET COMMITTEE

Since 1941, the State Budget Committee has been composed of two state senators, two state representatives and the budget director, all appointed by the Governor. This committee receives appropriation requests from the various state agencies and institutions, makes up a tentative biennial budget and submits it to the Governor for transmittal to the General Assembly. The committee also exercises supervision to some extent over salary schedules, rates of expenditure and other budgetary matters during the periods between legislative sessions.

BOARD OF PUBLIC PRINTING

Created in 1941, to succeed the Bureau of Public Printing which had been required by law to accept bids and allow contracts for each separate printing job required by any state agency, the Board of Public Printing effected large savings by making printing contracts for a year at a time. The Board was an ex officio body, consisting of the Governor, Secretary of State, Auditor and Reporter of the Supreme and Appellate Courts. The Director of Printing Purchases, appointed by the Board, was its executive officer.

DIVISION OF ACCOUNTING AND STATISTICS<sup>3</sup>

Created in 1909, the Division of Accounting and Statistics consisted of three related bureaus. The State Board of Accounts, an ex officio board made up of the Governor, Auditor, and State Examiner, was required to prescribe all forms for the handling of and accounting for expenditures of public money. The Department of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices was composed of the State Examiner, deputy examiners, and field examiners who were responsible for inspecting and supervising the accounts of every state official who spent public funds. The third bureau was that of the Indiana Year Book, Statistical Report, and State Roster, which were to be compiled and published by this division. In 1945, this rather complicated structure was simplified by the creation of a new State Board of Accounts which carried on all the functions of the antecedent bodies.

The war imposed a heavy burden upon this agency of the state government by raiding its manpower at the same time that it was tremendously expanding its work. The funds over which the division exercised supervision increased by 55% during the decade preceding 1945; the number of agencies, bureaus, and disbursement officers likewise grew, and the increased correlation of federal and state agencies as well as new tax and revenue laws necessitated constant modification of the business forms used by state and local officials. Much of the efficiency with which state government met the responsibilities of the war period may be attributed to the way in which the Division of Accounting and Statistics solved these problems.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Prior to 1945, the laws regulating state banks, loan associations, credit unions and other financial institutions were administered by a Department of Financial Institutions and by a Commission for Financial Institutions. The latter body consisted of six commissioners, appointed by the Governor for four year terms. The Commission appointed its own secretary, who might be a non-member. The Department, which carried out the administrative tasks involved in licensing, making examinations, supervising liquidations and keeping records, was headed by a Director appointed by the Governor and was organized in appropriate administrative divisions. In 1945, the Commission was changed to a board and made an integral part of the Department.

The duties of the Department of Financial Institutions kept it in intimate association with the purchase of war bonds and the provision of credit for war production in Indiana.

PART NINE
CIVILIAN DEFENSE

The core of the Hoosier citizen's contribution to the war effort was the tremendous civilian defense organization which antedated the war and carried on until V-J Day. Total war left fewer distinctions between soldier and civilian than Americans had ever known in previous conflicts. There had been an Indiana Council of Defense during World War I, but it was an infant in comparison to the giant which enlisted the efforts of 100,000 Hoosiers in World War II.

"We can rest assured," said Governor Schricker, as he recalled the past glories of Indiana soldiers, "that in the present emergency Indiana men will live up to the finest traditions of their Hoosier State.

"We civilians can do no less. The State and local Civilian Defense Councils in Indiana are organized to welcome into their ranks all patriotic citizens who desire to back up boys in uniform. May the echoes of our past be a constant spur to enlistment in this endeavor."

CIVILIAN DEFENSE IN INDIANA

Civilian Defense began in Indiana before the Federal Government or any other state had organized a similar program. The Nazi conquest of western Europe in the spring of 1940 and the unrest which that event created even in far-off Indiana, convinced Governor M. Clifford Townsend that some kind of a civilian defense organization should be attempted. On May 30, 1940, accordingly, he created a bi-partisan Governor's Emergency Defense Council of twelve (later sixteen) appointed members. Organized largely for its psychological effect, and as an advisory body, the Emergency Council met only three times during the next six months and automatically went out of existence when the Indiana State Defense Act took effect on March 10, 1941. It had, however, advised the Governor on such important matters as establishing a program for training badly needed skilled workers in defense plants, co-operating with the Federal Government in creating the machinery for Selective Service, establishing a State Guard to replace the National Guard when it was mustered into federal service, appointing a state director of civilian defense, rendering assistance to defense boom areas, and drafting legislation for the formal creation of a state defense organization.

Upon advice of his Emergency Defense Council, the Governor appointed Clarence A. Jackson, Executive Vice-President of the State Chamber of Commerce, to the position of State Director of Civilian Defense on September 19, 1940. Mr. Jackson's duties were vaguely defined, and he acted principally in an advisory capacity until after the passage of the State Defense Act. He became an ex officio member of the Emergency Defense Council.

On October 15, the Governor appointed Henry B. Steeg to the post of Defense Planning Co-ordinator and ex officio member of the Defense Council. His duties were to assist defense "boom areas" (particularly at Charlestown) to cope with the enormous problems in civic planning which the inrush of industrial workers had created.

INDIANA STATE DEFENSE COUNCIL

On March 10, 1941, the Indiana State Defense Act became effective. This Act established (1) the Advisory Defense Council; (2) the Administrative Defense Council; (3) the Office of Civilian Defense Director; (4) the State Defense Fund of $200,000.

ADVISORY DEFENSE COUNCIL

"There is hereby created an Advisory Defense Council for the State of Indiana which shall consist of not to exceed ten members who shall be appointed by the governor. Said members are to be so appointed as to be representatives of business, labor, agriculture, war veterans, consumers and of such other groups as the governor may determine essential to the defense program for the State of Indiana. Not more than five members of said committee shall be affiliated with the same political party. Unless the terms of the members be otherwise abridged by the dissolution of the council, each member of the council shall serve for a term of four years and until his successor shall have been appointed and shall have qualified.<sup>2</sup>

The ten members of the Advisory Council were appointed immediately by Governor Schricker. Three of them had been members of the Emergency Council, and two of these, in addition to four other members, were to remain on the Advisory Council until the end of its activities. The Council held its first meeting on March 18 and soon thereafter completed the organization of the Administrative Council by choosing Clarence Jackson as its fifth member, thereby automatically retaining him in his post as Civilian Defense Director for Indiana. Thereafter, the Advisory Council co-operated with the Administrative Council by furnishing information necessary to carry out the instructions of the statute, and by promoting harmony and co-ordination among the groups of citizens of which its members were representative.

ADMINISTRATIVE DEFENSE COUNCIL

"There is also hereby created an Administrative Defense Council consisting of the superintendent of public instruction, the director of public safety, the state labor commissioner, the secretary of the State Board of Health and a person herein-

after referred to as the civilian defense director, who shall serve as a member of and as chairman of the Administrative Defense Council.”<sup>3</sup>

The Administrative Defense Council served as a co-ordinating agency in charge of administering the state defense program. It co-operated with the federal government and other states in any matters pertaining to preparedness; organized men and materials to make them effective for defense purposes; recommended changes in state laws that might prove expedient; co-ordinated all public, civic, and social activities in order to promote the greatest possible efficiency, and did other things necessary to carry out the State Defense Act.

The amended State Defense Act of March 6, 1943, changed the composition of the Administrative Defense Council by adding the lieutenant governor, the secretary of state, the state treasurer, the attorney general, the state auditor, the chairman of the highway commission, the state fire marshal, and the director of the department of public welfare to the five officials designated in the original act. It also stated that “the director of the employment security division shall co-operate with and assist the Administrative Defense Council and the civilian defense director.”<sup>4</sup> Since the fire marshal, the attorney general, and the director of public welfare had already been appointed ex officio members of the Council by Governor Schricker, they now became mandatory members, while the director of the employment security division, also previously appointed, retained his ex officio relationship with the Council.

NATIONAL OFFICE OF CIVILIAN DEFENSE

The national OCD was established within the Office for Emergency Management by Executive Order 8757 on May 20, 1941. Thus, it followed rather than preceded the organization of civilian defense in Indiana as well as other states. One of its major purposes, in fact, was to co-ordinate federal, state, and local civilian defense programs. With the nation's entry into the war, plans for the protection of civilian life and property in the event of enemy attack or sabotage became an important objective. A third field of activity was that of promoting programs to sustain the national morale and to create opportunities for constructive civilian participation in the war effort.

The pattern of civilian defense evolved by the national office determined to some extent the form of organization adopted in Indiana, although the state defense council remained autonomous throughout the war years. Field representatives and liaison officers from national and regional OCD offices were established in Indianapolis to provide effective channels through which information and advice could flow.

An important part of OCD was the Volunteer Participation Committee, made up five prominent civilians appointed by the President in each of the Army Corps Areas.

INDIANA STATE DEFENSE COUNCIL STAFF

Creation of an executive staff through which the policies of the Advisory and Administrative Defense Councils could be carried into action was necessarily a process of improvisation. Its legal foundation was the provision in the Defense Act of 1941 for a Civilian Defense Director and for the appointment by the Administrative Council of "such other personnel as may at any time be deemed necessary in the prosecution of the defense program."<sup>7</sup> The amended act of 1943 gave the original appointment of staff members to the director, with the approval of the council. The combination of defense bodies, created by law and by circumstance, came to be called the State Defense Council, although no such title was ever conferred upon it officially.

The first members of the staff were the defense coordinator and his assistants, who had been appointed by the Governor's Emergency Defense Council and were transferred, on April 10, 1941, to the jurisdiction of the Administrative Council. Many staff members added later, such as the Coordinator of Negro Activities, and the Labor Co-ordinator, were appointed to meet a particular need in Indiana for which the national OCD or the Federal Government had made no effective provision. Others, such as the Tire Rationing Administrator and the Adviser on Priorities and Contracts, headed activities which later developed into, or were taken over by distinct federal war agencies such as OPA or WPB. Thus, their connection with the Defense Council was severed and their stay was brief.

After the Office of Civilian Defense worked out its program on a national scale, the Indiana Defense Council adapted its organization to the uniform plan. The two divisions, Civilian Protection and Civilian War Services, were set up in the state staff and in each of the county defense councils. Many of the officers in these divisions were employees of state departments directly concerned with civilian defense, such as the state police and the board of health, who had been designated as co-ordinators between their departments and the state defense council. Others headed a distinct wartime organization in the defense program, such as the Civil Air Patrol.

What might be called a fourth category of staff members were those officials employed by the director to conduct the necessary functions of any efficient office—information officers, field representatives, accountants, and administrative assistants. There were also the numerous secretaries, clerks, and stenographers whose names do not appear here, but whose contributions to the war effort were nonetheless important, and sometimes vitally so.

The State Defense Council was an elastic and adaptable agency, constantly taking on new projects, dropping old ones, and changing emphasis. As the likelihood of enemy attack on Indiana cities lessened, the war services aspect of the office came to be more important than the civilian protection division. In June, 1945, with the end of the war in sight, Mr. Jackson resigned as Civilian Defense Director. Acting by authority of an amendment added to the Defense Act in 1945, Governor Gates appointed his secretary, Ruel W. Steele, to succeed Mr. Jackson as Defense Director, with orders to liquidate the organization as soon as possible. Although some functions of the state office and most of the county councils continued until after V-J Day, the State Defense Council as a whole had ended its existence by June 30, 1945.

The constantly changing character of the State Defense Council makes it difficult to represent accurately. The following roster follows the organization as it existed in 1943. The accompanying charts will help to clarify relationships and lines of authority.

LOCAL CIVILIAN DEFENSE COUNCILS

No legal mandate for the establishment of a local civilian defense organization existed until the passage of the amended Defense Act of 1943. A committee, however, was appointed at the first joint meeting of the state Advisory and Administrative Council to study the problem. On October 10, 1941, Governor Schricker appointed the first ten County Civilian Defense Directors, and the remaining 82 were selected within the succeeding ten weeks. By the time we had entered the war, the local civilian defense network was well along toward completion.

The county remained the basis of local civilian defense in Indiana throughout the war. There were no district offices between the State Defense Council and the county councils. County directors were appointed by the Governor upon the recommendation of the State Defense Director, and they, in turn, selected the members of their councils. City defense councils distinct from the county organization were organized in many municipalities, but they were subordinate to the county director. At first, the local councils followed no uniform pattern. However, they were set up with the advice and aid of field representatives from the state office, and they were guided constantly by directives originating in Washington, Cleveland, or Indianapolis.

In 1943, the legislature included among the amendments to the Defense Act a section which established a Civilian Defense Director and Civilian Defense Council in each county of the state. Councils were to include "... the mayors and the presidents of town boards within the county, or their representatives, one county commissioner, the welfare director, the health officer, the agricultural agent, a member of the County Medical Society, member representing labor, member representing business, a woman representing women's interests, the prosecuting attorney, the sheriff, [and] the superintendent of schools . . ."<sup>17</sup> as mandated members, ". . . and such other members as the County Civilian Defense Director shall designate." The county council corresponded roughly to the State Advisory Council and had the same function—to ". . . promote harmony and co-operation among the various groups represented in the council . . . ." Members of the county defense staffs were divided into two groups, the Citizens Defense Corps and the Citizens Service Corps, which corresponded to the binary pattern of the State Defense Council. This form of the county organization is the one followed in the roster below.

PROTECTION DIVISION

The Protection Division of the Indiana State Defense Council concerned itself primarily with organizing, training, and certifying members of the Citizens Defense Corps. Certifications in each category of the Corps totaled:

Certified members of the Citizens Defense Corps were given a prescribed course of training by instructors who, in many cases, had previously taken special courses at Purdue University or elsewhere under the leadership of OCD agents. Armbands and insignia were issued to those who had qualified by reason of training, service, or occupation.

Defense control centers for mobilization, communications, air raid warnings, blackouts, etc., were established in every county and community of any size in Indiana. The commanders and chiefs of the various defense corps at each center are listed with their respective County Defense Councils.

INDIANA STATE POLICE

The principal functions of the Protection Division were of a police nature. It was therefore not unnatural that the state and local police forces furnished the key personnel in this division.

The Indiana State Police, also called the Division of Public Safety, operates under a four-member Police Board and a Superintendent of State Police, all appointed by the Governor. Sections of the staff have been assigned, under varying designations, to field operations, investigation, communications, records, training, public relations, supply, and office maintenance. Eleven posts, two of which were established to deal with defense boom areas, and twelve radio stations are maintained at various points in the state.

Before the war, state troopers spent most of their time and energy on traffic patrol and accident duty. Criminal investigation was an important but relatively minor function. The war not only added greatly to these normal activities but superimposed vital obligations in the fields of civilian defense and co-operation with military authorities. The Superintendent became a member of the State Administrative Defense Council and other members of the department were assigned to permanent duty with the defense organization. Thirty-eight state police officers served as instructors of auxiliary police corps personnel.

State policemen patrolled bridges, railroads, and utilities, and remained on a 24-hour alert against sabotage. Investigations of subversive and suspicious activities occupied much time. In co-operation with the armed forces, the police apprehended military deserters and draft dodgers, carried on drives against organized prostitution and gambling in the vicinity of military posts, and arranged for convoy of military shipments and movements along Indiana highways.

AUXILIARY POLICE INSTRUCTORS

Nearly 300 students of the three-day training schools held in March, 1942, in LaPorte, Fort Wayne, Logansport, Muncie, Indianapolis, Terre Haute, Greensburg, Bedford, and Evansville were graduated as auxiliary police instructors. About 10,000 auxiliary police volunteers were trained by these instructors. The training program was devised by Don F. Stiver, Director of Public Safety, with an advisory committee composed of Sherwood Blue, Marion County prosecutor, Chief Carey Thompson of Terre Haute, president of the Police Chiefs' Association, and Sheriff Walter Felger of Fort Wayne, president of the Sheriffs' Association.

AIR RAID DEFENSE

In the days immediately after Pearl Harbor, the danger of enemy air raids on American cities did not seem at all remote. It was therefore perhaps the most important function of civilian protection staffs to set up the kind of air raid warning system which had proven effective in England.

The Air Raid Warden System is the keystone of the Civilian Protection Structure. In the event of an air raid the Warden observes incidents of the disaster and reports them through the Senior Warden direct to the Chief Warden at the Control Center, or in large municipal areas through the division and zone posts as shown. His accurate reporting starts the action of all the Relief, Protective and Engineering Services of Civilian Defense.

The Block Warden through his acquaintanceship acquired during the organization and training of his neighbors for Protective Mobilization also serves as a Civilian Defense Director for his neighborhood. His assistance is important to the success of all the Civilian Defense Programs.

AIR WARNING SERVICE

The American Legion was assigned the task of setting up an air warning service which required the appointment of sixteen to twenty volunteer observers to staff six or eight observation posts in each county.

In December, 1941, the Legion appointed a chairman in each county who was responsible for organizing the air warning service. This service was maintained on a twenty-four hour status from December, 1941, until placed on alert status by a joint order of President Roosevelt and Brig. Gen. H. H. Arnold effective November 1, 1943.

AIR RAID WARDEN INSTRUCTORS

Under the sponsorship of the Indiana Department of the American Legion, a three-day school to train instructors for air raid wardens was held in Indianapolis in March, 1942. Expenses of the nearly 200 men who were qualified as instructors at the end of this school were borne by the American Legion and much of the burden in organizing and conducting the school was carried by that organization. Thirty-six thousand volunteers were trained by these instructors to serve as local air raid wardens.<sup>2</sup>

EMERGENCY COMMUNICATIONS

In setting up the state-wide emergency communications system, Lt. Walter V. Mentzer of the state police, State Co-ordinator, integrated the services of telephone and telegraph companies, commercial and amateur radio operators, air patrol facilities, and the state police communications system. He was aided in this work by an Advisory Committee of eleven communications experts and by the operators of the police radio stations.

The system included 120 local Co-ordinators of Communications, who were trained and organized in district meetings at Indianapolis, Columbus, Evansville, Fort Wayne, Lafayette, Muncie, South Bend, Terre Haute, and Gary. These Communications Co-ordinators are listed with their respective County Civilian Defense Councils.

INDIANA FIRE SERVICE

During the war, the Indiana Fire Service comprised all agencies in the State concerned with fire prevention and control, including the following:

- (1) State Fire Marshal Department;
- (2) State Civilian Defense Organization;

- (3) The 416 city and town fire departments, paid and volunteer, with total normal membership of 6,876 trained fire-fighters;
- (4) Approximately 1,000 town clerks and township trustees in communities having no fire departments, who are mandated by law to report fires and fire hazards in their areas;
- (5) Indiana State Fire Prevention Association;
- (6) Indiana Inspection Bureau and representatives of fire insurance companies which have active inspection services in Indiana;
- (7) Forest Fire Fighters Service;
- (8) Bureau of Factory Inspection, State Division of Labor;
- (9) Four firemen's associations—Indiana Fire Chiefs' Association, International Firefighters' Association, Indiana Firemen's Association, Indiana Industrial and Volunteer Firemen's Association;
- (10) Fire Service Training School, Purdue University.

The fire defense programs devised by the Indiana Fire Service included setting up a Mutual Aid system for local fire departments; supervision of the distribution of $1,500,000 worth of fire fighting equipment and other property loaned by the Federal Government to seventy-eight cities and towns of the State; enlarging the State Fire Service by recruiting and training an army of volunteer Auxiliary Firemen and other civil protection workers.

MUTUAL AID SYSTEM

The State Fire Defense Committee, appointed in August, 1941, by Fire Marshal Clem Smith, aided in devising the Mutual Aid system, based upon a survey of all fire departments in the state. This system enabled one community to help another in case of fire disaster.

The system was hindered at first by the fact that the local departments had no legal authority to move their equipment beyond their own corporate limits, and also by the fact that men and equipment were not covered by insurance when outside their particular corporate limits. These restrictions were removed by the State Legislature in passing the Fire Defense Mobilization Act of 1943.

ALLOCATION OF FEDERAL EQUIPMENT

From an appropriation of $100,000,000 made by Congress to protect American cities against fire, sabotage, and air raid, the Indiana Fire Service received an allocation of $1,000,000 worth of pumpers, hose, ladders, and fifty other essentials of fire fighting through the U. S. Office of Civilian Defense and the U. S. War Department. The amount loaned to Indiana was based upon the State's position, as one of eight States having most war contracts.

Cities and towns receiving the property were designated in three categories, according to their need. Twenty-one communities considered most likely to be attacked were placed in Target Area Number 1; twenty in Target Area Number 2; and fifty-seven were classed as Mutual Aid Towns.<sup>5</sup>

On July 25, 1942, Governor Henry F. Schricker appointed Joseph E. Rudd of the State Fire Marshal Department as State Property Officer of OCD. Local property officers were appointed by the mayors of their respective towns in the target areas.

INDIANA FIRE SERVICE TRAINING

Organized in 1934, Indiana Fire Service Training is the collective designation for the instructional programs which Purdue University and co-operating agencies offer to Indiana's paid and volunteer municipal firemen and industrial firemen in the advanced methods of their profession.

These activities in peace time comprise three schools of instruction: State Fire School, which meets annually at Purdue or Indianapolis for a three-day education program; Regional Fire School, consisting of a four-day course, for firemen only, offered at ten conveniently located regional centers; and Department Fire Schools, held by trained firemen who return home and train fellow members of their departments.

During the war, a fourth activity, embodying a series of special schools for training Auxiliary Firemen and other members of the Citizens Defense Corps, was conducted by the Fire Service Training schools, under the sponsorship of the Indiana State Defense Council.

Other wartime activities included the Air Raid Wardens School, Messenger Instructors School, Fire Defense Training for Public Utility Groups, and Instructors Short Course. Also, training courses for firemen or fire department instructors were conducted in practically every war industry and government facility in the state through the Regional Fire School.

In 1943, the fire service training program was established as a unit of the Public Safety Institute of Purdue University.

AUXILIARY FIRE SERVICE

In August, 1942, the office of State Fire Co-ordinator was created within the Civilian Protection Division of the State Defense Council. Robert F. Hamm, Assistant Educational Director of the Fire Marshal Department, was appointed to this position. He was charged with assisting in training regular, volunteer, and auxiliary firemen in all defense training programs; with aiding industries in setting up plant protection systems; and with supervising the auxiliary fire service in local communities. In due time, a complete network of auxiliary fire fighting units covered the state.<sup>6</sup>

A training program for auxiliary firemen, previously worked out by the Fire Defense Committee, was presented at the Indiana State Fairgrounds conference on December 22, 1941, to 800 mayors, presidents of town boards, and fire chiefs. In accordance with plans devised at this meeting, nine regional schools for training instructors of Auxiliary Firemen were held January 12 to 29, 1942, at Gary, Greensburg, Greencastle,

Fort Wayne, Indianapolis, Jasper, Lafayette, Muncie and Plymouth. These schools lasted three days each and trained a total of 590 instructors, representing 266 fire departments in Indiana. The instructors thus trained formed classes in their respective communities, and instructed 10,241 Auxiliary Firemen. Recruiting, training, and supervision of the volunteers was the responsibility of the local fire department chief.

Teachers of the regional schools were Russell Johann, Director of Education of the Fire Marshal Department, Emmett T. Cox and Robert F. Hamm of the Fire Service Training Schools.

INDUSTRIAL PLANT PROTECTION

An extensive research and training program for the protection of Indiana industries was begun by the Public Safety Institute of Purdue University in 1941. This Institute was the official industrial protection agency of the Indiana State Defense Council.

The program, established on the basis of elaborate research, gave training or informational services to more than 600 industries engaged in war work in Indiana. Two field representatives worked directly with representatives of industry.

Frequent industrial protection training schools were held at Purdue and on an in-service basis with individual industries over the state. Every month, series of industrial protection conferences were held in ten cities throughout the state.

Staff members of the Institute, assisted by other specialists, compiled a series of manuals and training aids on the various phases of police, fire, and safety protection. These materials were made available to all industries upon request. A monthly bulletin incorporating the latest information on plant protection was prepared and distributed.

INDIANA STATE DEFENSE INSPECTION PROGRAM

Through the co-operation of the Indiana State Fire Prevention Association, an organization of fire insurance underwriters, 139 insurance specialists volunteered to donate two days a week of their time in assisting the Fire Marshal Department in inspection of factories and other industries (numbering 4,800) connected with the war effort. The inspectors voluntarily prepared for the work by attending a special training school during the week of February 22-27, 1943, at the Indianapolis Athletic Club. This activity was designated the Indiana State Defense Inspection Program, and was given an official status under the Indiana State Fire Marshal's office.

FOREST FIRE FIGHTERS SERVICE

The Forest Fire Fighters Service was organized for the purpose of strengthening the forest protection agencies of the state, acquainting people of the forested areas with their responsibility in fire prevention and suppression; and providing equipment and training for volunteer fire fighters.

The Fire Protection Agency of the Indiana Division of Forestry assumed responsibility for training volunteer fire fighters. Over 11,500 volunteers were trained, and of these persons more than 8,500 were approved. High school students constituted over 7,500 of this number. Training was given in about 150 high schools and to eighteen adult groups in thirty-four counties. The Service worked in co-operation with the Civil Air Patrol and the State Police in detecting and combating fires.

ENGINEERING DIVISION

The Engineering Division of the State Defense Council was established to maintain highways and utilities under war conditions and to perform a variety of other services which depended upon the utilization of technical engineering knowledge. The program was directed by Earl W. Cassady, civil engineer of the State Highway Commission, on assignment to the Defense Council by Samuel C. Hadden, Chairman of the State Highway Commission.

The division's work fell naturally into two related categories, public works and utilities. For each of these, a state advisory committee, composed of leading engineers in each field, was formed. Local chiefs of Emergency Public Works and of Emergency Utility Service were designated in each county.<sup>9</sup> Engineering Advisory Committees and Contractor's Equipment Committees were also organized in many counties to assist the county chiefs. Invaluable aid was rendered by Purdue University, the technical schools, professional organizations of engineers and architects, and the associations of utility companies.

By order of the Governor, the entire organization of state, county, and city highway and street departments was fused into a co-ordinated unit, and placed within the civilian defense framework. Early in 1942, a series of regional conferences was held in the six highway districts of the state, at which 300 city street, county road, and state highway officials were qualified as instructors in OCD's road repair and demolition courses. They, in turn, gave this training to more than 3,000 employees of street and highway departments. Thus the local Road Repair and Demolition Crews, had there been any serious need for their services, were thoroughly organized and prepared for the emergency.

In co-operation with police units and with the Governor's Co-ordinating Safety Committee, the Engineering Division worked out traffic control plans for emergency situations which might arise from blackouts, air raids, explosions or other disasters, and heavy military transit. Architects were called upon to survey buildings for shelter locations and other emergency requirements. Tentative plans for mass evacuation of urban populations were made.

The Utility Emergency Program, devised by the State Utility Advisory Committee, provided for the certifying of key utility employees and their organization into civilian defense units.

STATE ENGINEERING ADVISORY COMMITTEE

The State Engineering Advisory Committee served as a consulting group and as an information gathering and disseminating unit to obtain, analyze, and pass on to local volunteer Engineering Advisory Committees all technical information important to civilian defense. Problems such as blackout lighting, selection and classification of protective shelters, and demolition activities came under this committee's jurisdiction.

EMERGENCY MEDICAL SERVICES

The Emergency Medical Services program was established by the Medical Division of OCD early in 1942. It was intended to organize the medical resources of a community for potential action in a war which included the unheralded bombing of civilian populations and the threat of sabotage. National OCD recommended the organization of emergency field units, casualty stations, first aid posts, decontamination stations, rescue squads, stretcher teams, and medical depots, and a survey of all available medical and surgical equipment, including ambulances and hospital beds.

Following the suggestions of OCD, Dr. John W. Ferree, State Chief of Emergency Medical Services, appointed a state advisory committee composed of individuals representing medicine, dentistry, nursing, hospital administration, pharmacists, funeral directors, and the American Red Cross. Local EMS Chiefs were appointed for each county, and urged to name county advisory committees with a similarly representative personnel. Medical Deputy Chiefs, Lay Deputies, Medical Gas Officers, and Nurse Deputies were later added to the EMS organizational pattern in order to share the heavy responsibilities of the county chief.<sup>10</sup> A great number of stretcher bearers, medical aides, ambulance drivers, nurses' aides, rescue squad members, etc., were recruited and trained in each community.

Although this elaborate organization, happily, was not called upon to serve in catastrophes occasioned by enemy action, it did prove its usefulness and efficiency during the disastrous 1943 floods in Indiana, and upon other occasions when serious accidents or crises struck particular communities.

EMERGENCY WATER AND SEWERAGE SERVICE

The Emergency Water and Sewerage Committee, organized in September, 1942, developed a state-wide Mutual Aid Plan through which water or sewerage plants might aid each other in making repairs of possible damage by sabotage or enemy action. The state was divided into twenty-one zones with a zone co-ordinator in each, functioning as a representative of the Committee.

Inventories of available supplies were taken, and instructions concerning protection against sabotage were sent to water works officials throughout the state.

The State Board of Health purchased an emergency mobile chlorinator which was used in flood emergencies in various sections of the state.

CHEMICAL WARFARE

Responsibility for the organization and administration of the state defense program against chemical warfare was delegated to the State Gas Consultant, Dr. Louis W. Spolyar, from the Board of Public Health. Since it was assumed that gas would be used, if at all, only on valuable industrial targets, the chemical warfare program in Indiana was concentrated in the 20 cities having the highest industrial population.

Dr. Spolyar developed tests for protection against chemical warfare agents, conducted schools for physicians and chemists, and issued information to local gas officers and reconnaissance agents. These officials were appointed by the County Defense Commanders in consultation with Dr. Spolyar.<sup>14</sup>

CIVILIAN WAR SERVICES

All activities of civilian defense not included in the protection division (Citizen's Defense Corps) were classified as Civilian War Services. These services were performed by the United States Citizens Service Corps, which, in Indiana, enlisted more than 200,000 volunteers, and by those paid employees of federal, state, and local governmental agencies whose normal functions were directly related to the war effort. The War Services branch of civilian defense was necessarily somewhat loosely organized. It included, at least in the beginning, such services as tire rationing and salvage collection, which later were taken over by OPA and WPB. It maintained liaison relationships with USO and the American Red Cross. It also created certain agencies, such as the Bi-Racial Committee, which were peculiar to Indiana. The majority of these activities are treated at length in other parts of this Directory. In addition to all these, there were the regular civilian war services, developed by national OCD, which were adopted in Indiana.

The U. S. Citizens Services Corps in Indiana was headed by Frank T. Millis, Assistant Director of the State Defense Council. On the local level, a Corps Commander in each county organized a Block System in urban communities and a Rural Neighborhood Leader System in the countryside. Block Colonels<sup>1</sup> commanded the Service Corps in each city, aided by a staff of officers down to and including Block Captains and Lieutenants. Rural Neighborhood Leaders were chosen and directed by the County Agricultural Agent.<sup>2</sup> Members of the Corps held themselves available for salvage drives, war bond campaigns, Red Cross volunteer services, aid in child care and recreation, and any of the other specialized activities which were included, from time to time, in this division.

WOMEN'S DIVISION

World War II not only came close to wiping out the distinction between soldiers and civilians—it also approached equality of the sexes so far as women's participation was concerned. Many corners of the domain of Mars, which may once have been considered primarily a man's field, were turned over entirely, or in large part, to women. This was true in the military services, in industry, and in agriculture, but even more true in civilian defense.

Conscious of this truth, Governor Schricker appointed Mrs. George W. Jaqua, immediate past-president of the Indiana Federation of Women's Clubs, to the Advisory Defense Council upon its organization. In April, 1941, she became the Women's Activities Co-ordinator on the State Defense Council staff and her department immediately became very active. A representative of women's interests was appointed to each County Defense Council and a consultation group, consisting of the state presidents of Indiana women's organizations, was formed. Representative women were placed upon the advisory committees of nearly every agency involved in the war effort.

The Women's Division had no program exclusively its own but it played a very large part in the work of such other defense committees as physical fitness, nutrition, child care, and salvage. Because the Women's Division participated so actively in those programs classified under the War Services Branch, it became more rather than less important as the war went on. Specific projects in which the Women's Division worked, included (1) the Victory Book Campaign, (2) fire prevention through home inspection and training, (3) Clean-Up Campaign, (4) kitchen fats salvage, (5) enrollment of student nurses, (6) recreation for servicemen, (7) Victory Gardens, (8) School Lunch-School Milk Week, (9) war bond campaigns, (10) accident prevention, (11) home nursing, (12) veterans' assistance, and (13) ration board volunteer service.

INDIANA PLAN OF BI-RACIAL CO-OPERATION

The Indiana Plan of Bi-Racial Co-operation was primarily a plan for the effective utilization of Negro labor in wartime industry. As such, it has been treated in the War Production section of this Directory.<sup>3</sup> Mr. J. Chester Allen, Negro Activities Co-ordinator on the State Defense Council, gave most of his time to this work. However, in order to enlist the whole-hearted support of Indiana Negroes in every phase of the war effort, assistant directors in many branches of the Defense Council were appointed to co-ordinate activities among Negroes with the general programs.

INDIANA STATE NUTRITION COUNCIL<sup>4</sup>

The Indiana State Nutrition Council was formed following the National Nutrition Conference for Defense called by the President in May, 1941. The Nutrition Council was affiliated with the State Board of Health and the State Defense Council.

Local nutrition committees were formed in each county through co-operation of the women's division of state and county defense councils.<sup>5</sup>

Some of the projects undertaken by the county committees were promoting school lunch programs, holding nutrition meetings, and giving demonstrations before clubs and service groups. Entire responsibility for the educational program on the share-the-meat campaign was delegated to the county committees.

The aim of the State Nutrition Council was to plan and promote a state-wide educational program on the relation of proper foods and diet to personal welfare. The scope of this nutrition education was so planned as to reach people on all levels of living, and was furthered through adult education by radio, newspapers, meetings, and demonstrations; through classroom teaching and the school lunch; through co-operation with cafeterias, restaurants, and other eating places; through the promotion of food production and preservation; and through surveys and research.

PHYSICAL FITNESS PROGRAM

The national physical fitness program, inaugurated by the Federal Security Administration, was designed to further the war effort by developing stamina, strengthening morale, and promoting the general health. The program was effected in Indiana by the appointment of a staff within the State Defense Council and of physical fitness representatives for men and women in each County Defense Council.<sup>6</sup> A state advisory committee helped the director formulate programs and policies.

There were three phases of activity—public health education, school health education, and recreation.

Public health activities included hygiene and first aid classes, physical fitness clinics, operation of speakers' bureaus, and life saving and water safety classes.

Every high school in the state had a physical fitness curriculum, while 39 counties and many cities developed community-wide programs.

The encouragement of popular sports, the improvement of rural recreational activities, and the fuller use of community and church facilities were phases of the recreational program.

CARE OF CHILDREN IN WARTIME

In October, 1942, Governor Schricker appointed a State Committee on the Care of Children in Wartime, an action recommended by the Children's Bureau Commission on Children in Wartime (of the U. S. Department of Labor), the office of Defense Health and Welfare Services, and the Office of Civilian Defense. This committee, consisting originally of thirty Hoosiers prominently concerned with child welfare, was essentially a part of the State Civilian Defense organization and was also intimately connected with the Department of Public Welfare.

The objective of the State Committee was to assist Indiana communities in protecting and safeguarding their children during the critical war period. It encouraged the organization of local committees, helped them develop their programs in accordance with local needs, and assisted in the co-ordination of state and federal services which were useful to local communities. Originally the committee was concerned primarily with the care of children of working mothers, but as that problem became less acute and others more so, the committee also turned its attention to child health, education, youth employment, and the prevention of juvenile delinquency. Sixteen additional members were appointed to cope with the new problems and each member was assigned to a sub-committee devoted to one particular activity. In the summer of 1944, the state committee was entirely reorganized with the chairmen of each of the five sub-committees, the State Chairman, and the Executive Secretary forming an executive sub-committee. It is this organizational framework which is presented in the roster below.

The local committees, organized in nearly every Indiana county, included representatives of the schools, the welfare department, health agencies, industry, organized labor, the employment service, women's clubs, service clubs, and other groups interested in children. Through their efforts the number of child care centers in the state increased from 12 to 81, exclusive of boarding homes. Many of these were established with the aid of Lanham Act funds furnished by the Federal Works Agency.<sup>7</sup> In 1943, local Juvenile Delinquency Committees began to appear in communities alarmed by the growth of this wartime danger. It was largely due to their labors that nearly one hundred Teen Canteens or similarly named youth centers were opened in Indiana towns during the last two years of the war.

Early in 1943, it was found necessary to divide the state into twelve districts and to establish in each district a field representative of the State Committee, whose duty was to

CIVIL AIR PATROL

The Civil Air Patrol was created as a division of the Office of Civilian Defense in December, 1941. At that time Governor Henry F. Schricker appointed Major Walker W. Winslow to command the Indiana Wing.

The CAP functioned from its inception to April 30, 1943, as a special division of OCD. On April 29, 1943, President Roosevelt issued an executive order transferring the organization from OCD to the War Department. The Secretary of War placed the CAP immediately under the Army Air Forces, as an auxiliary unit. Although the members and cadets of CAP were not in the Army, the organization now became a military, rather than a civilian, defense auxiliary. Its personnel remained on civilian status, serving however, under the Articles of War, as before, when on active duty.

The Indiana Wing of the CAP eventually recruited 4,500 active members, pilots, and associated personnel, using 500 privately-owned aircraft. The Wing was divided into twelve groups and fifty subordinate squadrons. Membership included both men and women, and a Cadet branch was organized for boys and girls in the two upper grades of the high schools. Training courses were given these Cadets as well as older aspirants to pilots' licenses.

Some of the major operations in which the Wing and its units participated were: (1) Forest Fire Patrol, which was maintained constantly during hazard seasons and which was responsible for the preservation of much irreplaceable timberland; (2) Industrial Courier Service, which involved the transportation of cargo and personnel necessary to maintain a high degree of industrial activity and prevent the shutdown of vital war plants; (3) Military Courier Service, as a liaison operation in the interest of all military bases together with cargo and personnel transportation; (4) Flood Patrol, carried on by hundreds of CAP ships and personnel under very adverse weather conditions, whereby many stricken areas were able to maintain transportation and communication services; (5) simulated bombings and similar maneuvers in co-operation with Civilian Defense for the purpose of activating air raid wardens, Control Centers and other emergency units.

In the early months of the war, CAP's most spectacular achievement was the anti-submarine patrol on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, which proved to be surprisingly effective. Twenty-seven men from Indiana participated in this service. After the early crises had passed, CAP became very active in recruiting high school boys for the Army Air Force.

INDIANA STATE GUARD

In anticipation of the induction of the Indiana National Guard into federal service, Governor M. Clifford Townsend issued an Executive Order, dated November 19, 1940, authorizing the organization of the Indiana Civil Defense Force under direction of the Adjutant General.

The 82nd General Assembly, in March, 1941, passed a bill providing for the establishment of the Indiana State Guard,<sup>1</sup> to which all commissions and enlistments in the Indiana Civil Defense Force were at once converted.

The Adjutant General was designated commanding officer of the State Guard and authority was given to the Governor to prescribe rules and regulations for its organization, maintenance, and training in harmony with regulations of the United States War Department.

The Act authorized the Governor to requisition from the Secretary of War available arms and equipment, and to make available to the State Guard the facilities of state armories and such other state premises as might be available. School authorities were authorized to permit the use of school buildings and school grounds by such forces.

Provision was made for reciprocal arrangements with bordering states with respect to common defense and the fresh pursuit of insurrectionists, saboteurs, or enemy forces across state boundaries.

Members of the Guard served without drill or instruction pay until appropriations for this purpose were made by the 1945 General Assembly. Previous appropriations had been for uniforms, equipment, supplies and administrative expense exclusively.

The Articles of War governing the National Guard relating to courts martial were in effect whenever units of the State Guard were on active duty. Provisions for freedom from arrest and exemption from jury duty also applied.

The State Guard Act was created in accordance with provisions of Public Law 874, 76th Congress,<sup>2</sup> which provided that states might be permitted to organize military units not a part of the National Guard whenever any part of the National Guard was in active federal service.

The Indiana State Guard was Indiana's own army, composed of units strategically located in 35 cities of the state and prepared for any emergency. It consisted of five regiments, each with three battalions and a medical detachment. There were three to five companies in each battalion, and three separate companies.

By means of co-ordinated exercises with the Defense Council in meeting practice emergencies the State Guard made an important contribution to the maintenance of an alert and trained defense force. It played a still more important part by providing relief in the real emergencies caused by floods, tornadoes, and fires at different times during the war years.

An opportunity for unusual service developed in the 1945-46 Christmas season when thousands of returning service men were stranded at transportation terminals by an unprecedented traffic congestion. Operating approximately 100 trucks over ice covered highways, state guardsmen hauled 6,900 of these servicemen on the last lap of their long journey home.

Deactivation of State Guard units started in February, 1947, and was completed by September 15, 1947. This action was made possible by the reactivation of the Indiana National Guard.

VOLUNTEER CIVIL HORSE PATROL

The Volunteer Civil Horse Patrol, numbering 2,500 mounted men and women, was sponsored by the Indiana Saddle Horse Association. Members of the patrol served in the Citizens Defense Corps of local defense councils as Auxiliary Police, Messengers, mounted Air Raid Wardens, etc., and in some counties were deputized by Sheriffs. Volunteers received forty hours training in policing and first aid, and were trained to deliver messages in blackouts and when no other form of communication was available.

AVIATION IN INDIANA

Indiana held a high place in national aviation during the war, ranking ninth among all states in concrete runways and other facilities useful for military purposes. At the beginning of the war, there were fifty-three operating airports in the state, seven of which were regarded by the War Department as of major importance. Immediately after Pearl Harbor, all airports were closed by federal authorities and reopened only after inspection and approval. Forty-seven Indiana airports had been reopened by the end of 1944. At that time there were 63 airfields in the state, 16 of which were operated by the military forces or the Federal Government. Of the remaining 47 civilian and commercial airports, 33 were privately owned, one belonged to the state, 12 were municipal, and one was a county field.

The post-war period brought such a boom in aviation that by July 1, 1946, there were 175 civil airfields in Indiana.

CIVIL AERONAUTICS ADMINISTRATION

A very important adjunct of national defense, which was responsible for increasing the pool of trained pilots from about ten to sixty thousand within a few months, was the Civilian Pilot Training Program established in four hundred and thirty-six colleges and universities throughout the land by the Civil Aeronautics Authority. Continuing after June 30, 1940, under the aegis of the Civil Aeronautics Administration, CPT further required the certification of a thousand additional flight instructors and of more than four hundred flying schools.

Civilian Pilot Training Schools were established in many of Indiana's colleges and universities, as has already been described.<sup>1</sup> Flight instruction was given in the following airports, some in connection with the college programs, and some independently.

CAA PERSONNEL

Indianapolis

Apart from the Civilian Pilot Training Program, CAA served the national defense and war effort by maintaining its regular supervision over airway facilities, inspecting aeronautical equipment, examining and licensing pilots and mechanics, and integrating civilian aviation with military needs. CAA activities in Indiana were supervised through the regional office in Chicago. Eight U. S. Airway Communications Stations were maintained in Indiana for essential air-ground communications.

UNITED STATES WEATHER BUREAU

The Weather Bureau, which was transferred to the Department of Commerce in 1940, became a war agency directed primarily toward serving military meteorological needs by Executive Order 8991 of December 26, 1941. Its work was of vital importance to military and civilian aviation, air transport, training schedules, war food production, and many other phases of war activity. The principal Indiana office of the Bureau is located in Indianapolis, with five other stations located in other parts of the state.

GOVERNOR'S COMMISSION ON AVIATION

Recognizing the increased importance of civil aviation in the post-war scene, Governor Schricker, in 1944, appointed a Commission on Aviation to study the Indiana situation and to make recommendations to the legislature. The researches of this commission resulted in a series of laws culminating in the establishment of the State Aeronautics Commission.

AERONAUTICS COMMISSION OF INDIANA

Although the Indiana Aeronautics Commission came into existence near the end of the war and therefore had little to do with it directly, it has become very much involved with the war's effects on civil aviation. Created by the 1945 General Assembly, the Commission consists of five members, appointed by the Governor, and has an executive director, also appointed by the same authority. The Commission was directed to undertake a number of activities, largely promotional in character, leading to the development of aviation in Indiana, to co-operate closely with the federal Civil Aeronautics Administration, and to approve the purchase of land by local governments for airport construction.

When Congress amended the G. I. Bill in 1946 to make courses in flight training feasible, the Aeronautics Commission was asked to undertake the task of certifying flying schools for proper accreditation by the Department of Veteran's Affairs and the Department of Public Instruction. A uniform set of standards was promptly and carefully devised. By June of 1946, seventy-nine flying schools in the state had been approved by the Commission's Aviation Board and twenty-three more applications were pending.

CONSERVATION AGENCIES

War is associated with destruction rather than conservation. Its principal effect upon the conservation agencies of state and nation was probably one of interference with their normal activities. Nevertheless, these agencies played an important role in national defense by protecting the state's natural resources and developing those which were especially useful in the conduct of war.

In addition to the conservation agencies, treated in the following pages, others may be found at the places in this Directory designated below:

United States Forest Service, p. 544.

U. S. Soil Conservation Service, p. 545.

State Soil Conservation Committee, p. 559.

INDIANA DEPARTMENT OF CONSERVATION

Since 1941, the State Department of Conservation has been under the general supervision of a State Conservation Commission composed of four members, appointed by the Governor. Also appointed by the Governor is the Director of the department who heads a large staff. The principal administrative divisions of the department, such as Fish and Game, State Parks, State Forests, Geology, etc., with functions easily recognized by their names, remained pretty much unchanged during the war years, although each of them took on new wartime duties.

The most important contribution of the department to civilian defense was the organization of the Forest Fire Fighters Service, which has already been described.<sup>1</sup> Game wardens and conservation officers in state preserves assisted in fire prevention and with patrols against sabotage. State parks were made available for housing war plant workers in some areas. As CCC, NYA, and WPA units, formerly cooperating with the department in making improvements in the state parks and forests, were withdrawn from Indiana, Civilian Public Service Camps to some extent replaced them. The Division of Geology assisted in the making of land surveys for newly developed defense areas and military reservations, and in the location of new sources of vital minerals. The State Engineer co-operated fully with the Emergency Water Service of the State Defense Council.

CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS

The Civilian Conservation Corps was one of those federal agencies created for the alleviation of an earlier economic crisis which proved to be extremely useful in the early months of the new crisis facing the nation in 1941. Its original purpose had been to provide employment and vocational training for needy youthful citizens by enrolling them for work on useful public projects, particularly in the sphere of conservation. In May, 1940, the Corps began gradually converting to defense work on military reservations and to forest protection. Immediately upon the entry of the United States into the war, all other work was laid aside.

CCC work in Indiana was under the control of an Army headquarters staff at Fort Benjamin Harrison until the curtailment of activities enlarged the district of which Indiana was a part and removed headquarters to Ohio in 1942. The selecting agency for all junior enrollees was the State Department of Public Welfare.<sup>2</sup> In 1940 there were 28 camps in Indiana. This number decreased rapidly after the declarations of war, when activity came to be confined almost exclusively to the military installations and ordnance reservations rapidly being developed in the state. The number of enrollees dwindled steadily throughout 1942, and the Corps was liquidated on June 30, 1943.

HOUSING AGENCIES

Hoosier communities whose populations began to grow rapidly in 1940, due to the construction of a defense plant and a resultant influx of workers, discovered that housing was to be one of their principal problems. Before the end of the war it had become a matter for serious consideration everywhere, but in "boom" areas such as Charlestown and Kingsbury or in the great industrial centers it produced an element of crisis. Private enterprise and local government accomplished wonders in attempting to meet some of the needs, but they were hampered by the scarcity of building materials and the inability to plan on a sufficiently large scale. The Federal Government, which had long been in the housing business as a guarantor of credit and a stimulator of local endeavor, was increasingly impelled to enter the field in a more active way.

During the depression years and the "defense period" preceding our entry into the war, a host of federal agencies had either assumed some responsibility in the field of housing or had been created to deal with a particular aspect of the problem. When the National Housing Agency was created by Executive Order 9070 on February 24, 1942, to bring these unco-ordinated activities under a single administration, it fell heir, in whole or in part, to the housing functions of 17 different federal agencies.<sup>1</sup> These were regrouped into three functional units under the National Housing Agency.

(1) The Federal Home Loan Bank Administration, which included the Home Owner's Loan Corporation, was concerned principally with the financial stability and wartime usefulness of home-financing institutions.

(2) The Federal Housing Administration had been encouraging the construction of private dwelling houses by insuring home-financing institutions against losses and setting standards for home building. Mortgage restrictions were considerably liberalized in 1942, in order to encourage the investment of private capital in house building in defense areas.

(3) The Federal Public Housing Authority became the principal agency through which federal funds were made available for housing projects in war production areas. Under the terms of the Lanham Defense Housing Act and other legislation passed in 1940 and 1941, a number of federal agencies including the Farm Security Administration, the RFC, the War and Navy Departments, several units of the Federal Works Agency, and the United States Housing Authority had sponsored various types of defense housing projects. All these were inherited by the FPHA in February, 1942. During the remaining months of the war the FPHA administered the bulk of the public war housing program for which Congress appropriated more than two billion dollars. This represented most of the government's direct investment in war housing and it produced nearly forty-five percent of the 1,900,000 units constructed or made available by remodeling before the end of the war. The remaining fifty-five percent was accomplished by private capital, insured and partially supervised by the credit branches of the National Housing Agency.

The end of the war and the consequent release of millions of veterans seeking to establish new homes aggravated the housing problem tremendously. The FPHA entered upon a large scale into the business of converting temporary war time housing into emergency accommodations for veterans and servicemen, providing such housing particularly to colleges and to municipalities. Twenty-five Indiana educational institutions and nineteen communities contracted with the FPHA for the erection of 8,707 temporary veteran's housing units. Added to the earlier projects developed in Indiana, this produced a sum total of 29,430 new housing units for which FPHA (and its successor, the Public Housing Administration) had become responsible prior to June 30, 1948. However, only 16,970 units remained under active management on that same date, the difference representing those which had either been disposed of in various ways, deferred, or never completed because of changing war requirements. Although the federal housing agencies directly managed many of their projects, particularly in boom towns, the larger number of them were administered by educational institutions, local housing authorities, municipal boards, and private brokers. The thirteen slum clearance, low-rental developments, which had been sponsored in Indiana by local housing authorities under state enabling legislation with the assistance of the U. S. Housing Authority, were also adapted to war housing needs by the granting of preferential tenancy to war workers. The various public housing programs in Indiana are listed below in tabular form.

Both the National Housing Agency itself and its constituent, the Federal Public Housing Authority, maintained regional offices in Chicago which supervised their work in Indiana. The Federal Housing Administration administered its operations in Indiana through a state office at Indianapolis with a branch at Gary. One of the twelve regional Home Loan Banks is also located in the Hoosier capital.

STATE HOUSING BOARD

This board was set up in 1937 to administer the Housing Authorities Act which provided for the construction of low-cost dwellings by local authorities in co-operation with the Federal Government.<sup>14</sup> During the war it supervised the activities of county and municipal authorities in their efforts to meet the many housing shortages which developed. ## WAR HOUSING CENTERS

War-swollen communities in Indiana usually established Home Registers for the dissemination of information about available housing. These offices were supported locally by community funds, civilian defense councils, social agencies, or governments. Eventually, the National Housing Agency provided operating funds for these agencies and their designations were changed to War Housing Centers. They operated under varying types of agreements between NHA and the local sponsors, and undertook tasks ranging from mere registration to the actual leasing and remodeling of properties suitable for war workers' tenancy.

INDIANAPOLIS WAR HOUSING CENTER

A Homes Registry and Information Bureau was organized in 1942, staffed from OCD, and financed through the Council of Social Agencies. A citizens' sponsoring committee was appointed and a volunteer director chosen, to be replaced soon by a salaried director. In 1944, the Registry became a War Housing Center by agreement with NHA and was thereafter supported by the Federal Government until the end of the war.

EVANSVILLE WAR HOUSING CENTER

The Evansville OCD established a Housing Bureau in March, 1942, to list available dwellings and make referrals. In September, NHA opened a Homes Registration Office, and the two units were combined into a War Housing Center on November 1. This agency leased a large number of private homes and converted them into apartment houses.

PROTECTIVE AGENCIES

The primary function of government at any time is protection of the citizen; warfare is a tremendous projection of that function. The core of the Civilian Defense organization was the Civilian Protection Division (see p. 1011) which, together with the State Guard (p. 1080) and the Civil Air Patrol (p. 1067), gave Indiana excellent wartime security.

Listed below are several agencies which were not immediate parts of the civilian defense organization, but which played important roles in the maintenance of domestic tranquillity. The federal and state courts, which were, of course, closely associated with these agencies in the enforcement of the law, are listed in Part One of this Directory, pp. 39-40, 51-59.

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

Through its office at Indianapolis, the Federal Bureau of Investigation probed into thousands of cases involving alleged violations of federal statutes during World War II in Indiana. Although few of these culminated in prosecutions and convictions, the vigilance of the FBI had a wholesome deterring effect on would-be traitors, saboteurs, draft dodgers, and subversive individuals.

Matters which occupied much of the Bureau's attention included the apprehension and internment of enemy aliens; the investigation of more than 11,000 cases of alleged espionage, sedition, and sabotage; the examination of several hundred cases of fraud in connection with war contracts and servicemen's dependents' allowances; and the investigation of more than 15,000 cases of draft evasion.

Special agents of the FBI must be graduates of a law school or of an accredited school of accounting. In 1944, there were 206 special agents in the Bureau who had graduated from Indiana educational institutions.

ALIEN ENEMY HEARING BOARDS

After the United States was drawn into the war, a number of aliens of enemy nationality residing in Indiana were arrested and detained for security reasons. In each of the federal districts in the state, Attorney General Francis Biddle appointed Alien Enemy Hearing Boards, whose duty it was to hear each case and decide whether the alien concerned should be interned or released on bond. These hearings were finished during the first months of 1942.

STATE FIRE MARSHAL DEPARTMENT

The State Fire Marshal Department began war emergency work early in 1941 when the industrial plants of Indiana started large scale manufacturing for defense. With full police authority, conferred by law upon his office and staff of deputies, the State Fire Marshal enforced all state, city, and town fire-prevention laws, and the rules and regulations of his own department; functioned to prosecute arsonists and other fire law violators; signed official orders for condemnation or correction of fire hazards; directed the preventive and investigational work of 416 city and town fire chiefs, who with 1,000 town clerks and township trustees were by law assistant State Fire Marshals.

Duties of the Inspection Division were greatly increased by the establishment of munitions plants at Charlestown, Madison, Burns City, and Kingsbury; the hasty conversion of industrial plants; and the great number of temporary shelters or houses badly renovated to accommodate the influx of workers. The establishment of trailer camps caused the department to promulgate regulations for wiring and heating the trailers, and to assure compliance with these rules.

In addition to supplying the above services, the department co-operated with civilian defense and other state agencies in expediting the fire defense programs devised by the Indiana Fire Service.<sup>1</sup>

PUBLIC WORKS

Listed below are several agencies, both state and national, which had in common the peace time function of spending public funds for the construction or maintenance of public roads, buildings, and other structures. Their wartime contributions were varied but each played an important part in Indiana's defense.

STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSION OF INDIANA

The State Highway Commission was created in 1917 to supervise the system of state highways which was inaugurated by the General Assembly in that year. It consists of four members (three from 1933 to 1941) appointed by the Governor. The Chairman of the Commission also serves as administrative head of the central office and of the six district offices through which the highway system is maintained.

Although the war necessarily curtailed activity in highway construction, it placed great responsibilities upon the shoulders of the State Highway Commission. The War Department designated 1,143 miles of Indiana highways as part of the strategic network essential to the war effort. The Commission was asked to maintain these roads in a high degree of excellence, and to build many miles of access roads to newly-constructed ordnance plants, military reservations, and airports. The Federal Government assumed about 79% of the cost of maintaining the key roads, and the entire expense of the access roads.

State, county, and city highway departments played an important role in the civilian defense program.<sup>1</sup> Heavy responsibilities were also placed upon the Traffic Department in the Division of Maintenance which was asked to work out the War Transportation Conservation Program in Indiana.<sup>2</sup>

Heavy war traffic, together with the limited maintenance work which could be provided in war times, made for rapid deterioration of the Indiana highway system. The Highway Commission faced a difficult post-war task in restoring it to its former high level of efficiency.

PUBLIC ROADS ADMINISTRATION

The Public Roads Administration, a part of the Federal Works Agency, maintains a close co-operative relationship with the State Highway Departments in the administration of federal-aid funds for highway purposes.

During the war, the co-ordination of the skilled national engineering staff with willing state highway departments resulted in an organization that could readily cope with the problems of wartime traffic. Planning and constructing new roads needed in connection with newly created or enlarged military and industrial establishments, and the development, in co-operation with the War Department, of a strategic highway network to meet the military requirements of national defense was the main goal of this organization during the emergency.

The Public Roads Administration operates with a District Office located in Indianapolis under a Division Office in Chicago.

FEDERAL WORKS AGENCY

The Federal Works Agency, as created by the President's Reorganization Plan of 1939, included the Public Roads Administration, the Public Buildings Administration, the Public Works Administration, the Work Projects Administration, and the United States Housing Authority. It thus combined under one management the principal national agencies which administered federal grants and loans for public works. Its housing functions were transferred to the National Housing Agency in 1942.

In June, 1940, the FWA was designated a defense agency and was subsequently empowered to function under the Lanham Act. A Defense Public Works Division, later called the War Public Services Division, was set up to administer funds and grants under this act to war-crowded communities. Funds were provided for school facilities, nursery schools, recreation programs, emergency health programs, and assistance to local police and fire departments. The FWA was especially active in the Charlestown, LaPorte, and Newport areas during the mushrooming "defense" period.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS ADMINISTRATION

Established as part of the Federal Works Agency in 1939, the Public Buildings Agency exists principally for the purpose of designing, making contracts for, maintaining, and repairing public buildings owned by the United States Government. Prior to the creation of the National Housing Agency, it assumed a considerable responsibility for the erection of temporary defense housing. A Special Operations Unit was organized to build schools, hospitals, and recreational buildings in defense areas. The Public Buildings Administration was active in the defense boom areas in Indiana during 1941 and 1942. It sponsored defense housing projects totaling 750 units in Charlestown, Jeffersonville, New Albany, and South Bend.

PBA operations in Indiana were directed by a district office in Chicago.

WORK PROJECTS ADMINISTRATION

As a federal agency which had been established in Indiana long before the outbreak of war, WPA found many ways to make itself useful to the defense program. It pioneered in many activities which were eventually absorbed by newly created wartime agencies. Before its liquidation by presidential order on December 4, 1942, it had come to devote a major portion of its attention to war-related projects.

Soon after President Roosevelt's proclamation of a national emergency in September, 1939, the WPA Training and Re-employment Division was established to place WPA employees directly in Hoosier defense industries. WPA selected the workers and paid them WPA wages during the training period; teachers and supervisors were furnished by the U. S. Office of Education; and the whole was organized by the OPM. Meanwhile, the regular divisions of WPA turned to such activities as offering refresher courses preparatory to Army flying school examinations, educating aliens for citizenship, surveying safe storage places for art treasures, maintaining house vacancy registers, compiling a directory of civic organizations available for defense services, and providing recreational leadership for crowded industrial defense areas.

After the nation entered the war, a re-organized WPA devoted its major services to the achievement of victory. The number of WPA workers employed directly on war projects increased from 34% to 41% of the whole number of enrollees during the fiscal year 1942. The Division of Operations employed 15,000 laborers on 164 war-related projects in Indiana, including vital construction at Burns City, Camp Atterbury, Stout Field, and Fort Benjamin Harrison. The War Service Section of the Division of Community Service employed 1,900 people in six projects which created models, maps, charts, and posters for Civilian Defense Offices; established lending libraries in mushroom defense areas; set up information centers to disseminate instruction in health, first aid, and consumer's guidance; provided musical entertainment for camps and training centers; and taught a variety of classes in adult education. The Defense Health and Welfare Section employed 2,800 persons in projects designed to minister to the basic human needs of industrial and military communities. Its program included assignments of workers to hospitals, clinics, and boards of health; the preparation of school lunches and the dietary training of household workers; a sewing project which provided clothing, bedding, linen, and uniforms for distribution to the poor and for use in public institutions; and the maintenance of day nurseries in military and industrial areas.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Under this heading, which is itself a somewhat ambiguous term, are listed several federal and state agencies loosely connected with each other and also directly concerned with some phase of the civilian defense program. In general, they were concerned with the physical well-being, social opportunities, and economic security of a civilian population occupied with the burdens of war.

Other agencies usually classified under social security which appear elsewhere in this Directory are:

FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY

The Federal Security Agency was created by the President's Reorganization Plan No. I in April, 1939. Grouped within it were such varied pre-existing federal agencies as the Civilian Conservation Corps,<sup>1</sup> the National Youth Administration,<sup>2</sup> the Office of Education,<sup>3</sup> the Public Health Service, the Social Security Board, and the United States Employment Service. Other agencies and institutions, including the Food and Drug Administration, were transferred to FSA by subsequent executive orders.

An intimate relationship existed between the Federal Security Agency and certain war-born units of the Federal Government. The ties with one of these, the War Manpower Commission, have been discussed elsewhere.<sup>4</sup> Hoosier Paul V. McNutt, Administrator of the Federal Security Agency and Chairman of the War Manpower Commission, had also been appointed the Co-ordinator of Health, Welfare, and Related Defense Activities in November, 1940. By Executive Order 8890, September 3, 1941, this rather nebulous responsibility was transformed into an Office of Defense Health and Welfare Services within the Office for Emergency Management, with McNutt as Director. An extensive program of investigation, stimulation, education, and co-operation with local authorities in such matters as community recreation, social protection, physical fitness, nutrition, health, and sanitation was launched by this agency, particularly in "defense" communities where local facilities were overwhelmed by a sudden influx of military or in-migrant labor population.

Executive Order 9338, dated April 29, 1943, transferred the functions of the Office of Defense Health and Welfare Services directly to the Federal Security Agency where they were allotted to a newly-organized Office of Community War Services and a Committee on Physical Fitness. The former branch of FSA made a number of important surveys in Indiana communities where the war had created special problems of housing, recreation, health services, or racial tensions. Neither the Federal Security Agency, as such, nor the Office of Community War Services maintained offices in Indiana. Their local work was carried on to a large extent through the field organization of the Social Security Board. Thus, a Regional Advisory Council, on which twenty-three federal agencies were represented, supervised the work of the ODHWS throughout Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin, comprising the sixth region of the Social Security Board, from the regional office in Chicago. From September 1, 1941, co-ordinators from this office advised, consulted with, and guided local committees in their expenditures of federal funds for the creation of recreational facilities in crowded areas, beginning with Charlestown and LaPorte. The Federal Security Agency also sponsored an extensive state-wide recreational program undertaken by the WPA.<sup>5</sup>

With the extensive development of USO centers throughout the state, the Recreation Division of OCWS restricted its activities largely to advisory and trusteeship functions. The Social Protection Division, however, continued to co-operate closely with the U. S. Public Health Service and the armed services to prevent the spread of venereal disease during the later years of the war and post-war period. The work of the Physical Fitness Committee, which terminated on June 30, 1945, was an integral part of the civilian defense system and is detailed in that section of this Directory.<sup>6</sup>

SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD

The Social Security Board, which had been created by Congress in 1935, to administer the provisions of the Social Security Act, became a part of the Federal Security Agency in 1939. Congress imposed three principal duties upon the Board:

(1) To certify to the Treasury federal benefit payments to be made to eligible old-age workers and dependents of deceased workers covered by the insurance plan inaugurated by the law of 1935;

(2) To approve, certify, and inspect the state plans for old-age assistance, aid to dependent children, and aid to the blind, all of which were financed by state-federal funds;

(3) To approve, certify, and inspect the state unemployment compensation plans which were authorized by the Social Security Act.<sup>7</sup>

These activities were carried out in Indiana by the regional office in Chicago and fifteen field offices within the state. Besides serving as the local outlets for the Office of Community War Services, these field offices supervised a war relief program for families of servicemen, dependents of enemy aliens, and nationals of other countries stranded by the war.<sup>8</sup>

STATE DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WELFARE

The Department of Public Welfare was created following the passage of the Welfare Act of 1936, by which the Indiana General Assembly accepted the benefits of the federal Social Security Act. It created a State Board of Public Welfare consisting of five members, appointed by the Governor for overlapping four year terms. The Board determines the policies of the department, establishes rules for its operation and, with the approval of the Governor, appoints the Administrator who also serves as its secretary. The statute of 1936 also required the establishment of a department of public welfare in each of the state's counties.

Four divisions within the department were designated by law: (1) the Division of Public Assistance, (2) the Children's Division, (3) the Division of Medical Care, and (4) a Division of Corrections. Divisions of Mental Hygiene, of Services for Crippled Children, of Unemployment Relief, and of General Administration were later established by the Board.

At the beginning of the defense period, the Department of Public Welfare was working in close relationship with a number of defense agencies. It administered the federal-state funds earmarked for old-age assistance, aid to dependent children, and aid to needy blind under the Social Security Administration's plans. It selected CCC and NYA enrollees. The Children's Division co-operated with the United States Children's Bureau in fostering child-care programs in rural areas and in defense communities. The Unemployment Relief Division certified relief cases to WPA, administered the Food Stamp Plan, sponsored direct distribution of food by the Surplus Marketing Administration, certified applications under the Artificial Leg Project, and performed investigations for Selective Service Boards.

The Administrator of the Department of Public Welfare, Thurman A. Gottschalk, became an ex officio member of the State Civilian Defense Council in 1941. He promptly assigned a member of his staff, Arthur W. Potts, "to facilitate and coordinate the defense services of the State Department of Public Welfare with the Regional Office of the Director of Health, Welfare, and Related Activities, the Regional Office of the Social Security Board, the State Civilian Defense Councils, and other state and county agencies participating cooperatively in the defense program."<sup>9</sup>

The welfare director in each county became a member of the County Civilian Defense Council. He was expected to organize a Community Service Committee which would formulate emergency welfare plans, investigate housing and recreational needs, and work closely with other local agencies for the prosecution of the war program.

Further development of the war machine brought additional opportunities for service to the welfare organization. It served as an outlet for the printed materials and the educational program of the Federal Security Agency's Office of Community War Services.<sup>10</sup> The services of the Division of Corrections were utilized by Selective Service officials in classifying inmates of penal institutions and parolees for possible military service. The Division of Public Assistance acted as the agent of the Federal Government in the performance of Civilian War Aid Services. Psychiatric service to Selective Service Boards and for the benefit of returning servicemen was provided by the Division of Mental Hygiene. The Children's Division assumed an important responsibility in co-ordinating local child-care programs with the special work of the State Committee on the Care of Children in Wartime.<sup>11</sup>

The county welfare departments were tied into the civilian defense program and co-ordinated by the Division of Field Services, which worked through 12 district representatives and through consultants of the other divisions whose services were available to the local departments.<sup>12</sup>

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

As the federal agency specifically charged with the protection and improvement of the public health, the Public Health Service worked intimately with the State Board of Health and private organizations to fight disease and sickness on the home front during the war. It assisted state and local health authorities in maintaining proper sanitation facilities in military and industrial areas where abnormal increases in population endangered the public safety. The control of venereal disease was one of its principal projects. It acted as the approving agency for construction of sanitation and hospital facilities under the Lanham Act. Under the provisions of the Bolton Act, it administered the war nurse training program.

The community sanitation program was directed by officers located in several regions of Indiana, under the general supervision of the State Board of Health.

INDIANA STATE BOARD OF HEALTH

Throughout the major part of the war, the State Board of Health consisted of five members, all physicians. Four of these were appointed by the Governor and were compensated only for meetings of the board which they attended. The fifth member, elected by the other four, was the secretary of the board, and the State Health Commissioner (or Director), in charge of the administrative staff. In 1945, the Board was reorganized to include nine members, exclusive of the Commissioner.

The regular work of the board, conducted by its thirteen well established bureaus or divisions, carried through the war period without any major change. The board was established to extend public health service into local areas through the promotion of full-time municipal and county health departments. It co-operates in all public health matters with the Federal Security Administration and the U. S. Public Health Service.

The responsibilities of the State Board of Health for maintaining Hoosier physical well-being were vastly increased by the war, and the problems involved became tremendous. Especially in newly developed defense and war boom communities, the difficulties of providing adequate medical safeguards and sanitary facilities multiplied as the war effort grew. Through the Emergency Medical Services, the Chemical Warfare division, the Emergency Water and Sewerage service, the State Nutrition Council, and the Physical Fitness program, all treated in detail elsewhere in this volume, the board was intimately connected with the State Defense Council. In addition to these special duties, the various divisions of the staff performed services vital to the war effort in their routine activities, as the following recapitulation indicates:

The State Epidemiologist investigated sources of communicable diseases, advised communities on the control of infections, and participated in immunizations and the distribution of vaccines.

The Dairy Products Division safeguarded the milk supply, investigated dairy products imported or manufactured in the state, and furthered the adoption of Grade A milk agreements.

The Maternal and Child Health Division provided a variety of programs for the care of newborn infants, distributed portable incubators, and supervised the licensing of maternity homes and hospitals. Funds for the medical care of wives and children of men in the armed services were administered by this department.

The Health and Physical Education Division supervised school health programs, promoted health education, and provided educational materials for the public schools and other interested groups.

The Laboratory ran syphilis tests for marriage license applicants, prenatal and selective service cases. It also performed services for the medical profession in connection with a number of communicable diseases.

The Industrial Hygiene Division investigated the causes of occupational diseases, sickness, and disability among workers, and recommended remedial measures.

The Food and Drugs Division enforced laws against adulteration, unsanitary manufacture, and mis-branding of food, drugs, and cosmetics. It supervised and inspected meat storage plants and frozen food lockers.

The Environmental Sanitation Division administered the sanitation laws regarding water, sewage, schools, swimming pools, tourist camps, housing, etc. It supervised malarial control projects operating in critical war areas.

The Public Health Nursing Service co-ordinated the activities of all public health nurses and assisted communities to obtain adequate nursing service.

The Weights and Measures Division inspected all weighing and measuring equipment used by distributors, and checked packaged commodities for correct weight.

The Venereal Disease Control Branch co-operated with local clinics and professional and lay groups to combat venereal diseases by education, treatment, and control. This work was especially important in the vicinity of military establishments.

The Vital Statistics Department filed birth and death certificates for the state.

The Local Health Administration supervised the eight health district offices which were branches of the central office, as well as the part-time city and county health offices throughout the state.<sup>14</sup> The decentralized program of district health officers proved invaluable during the war by providing a means for concentrating health services in crowded communities unable to provide for their own needs.

VETERAN'S AFFAIRS

The veterans of World War II unquestionably received better treatment from their state and national governments than those of any other war in our history. Attention to their interests began with the provision for re-employment committeemen on selective service boards and reached a new height of statesmanship with the passage of the G. I. Bill of Rights in 1944. Reference has been made frequently in this Directory to provisions made for the rehabilitation and re-absorption of veterans into the normal activities of communities, economic life, educational institutions, social life, and private organizations. There are listed here, in addition, the two principal governmental agencies, federal and state, which were created to serve the veteran.

UNITED STATES VETERANS ADMINISTRATION

The Veterans Administration, created in 1930, consolidated all former federal agencies dealing with veterans' affairs. It administers all laws relating to the relief and benefit of former members of the military and naval forces. "These laws include, in addition to compensation, pensions, vocational rehabilitation, and education, the guarantee of loans for purchase or construction of homes, farms, and business property, readjustment allowance for veterans who are unemployed, Government life insurance, death benefits, adjusted compensation, emergency and other officer's retirement pay, and physical examinations, hospital and outpatient treatment, or domiciliary care."<sup>1</sup>

The Veterans Administration is a highly decentralized agency. Immediate contact with veterans is established through field stations, a term applied to any regional office, area office, hospital, or other type of facility. Thirteen Branch Offices maintain contact between the field stations and the national headquarters. The Branch Office for Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin is located in Chicago. The four field stations in Indiana are the Regional Office at Indianapolis, the Billings General Hospital at Fort Benjamin Harrison, the Veterans Hospital in Marion County, and the Neuropsychiatric Hospital at Marion.

INDIANAPOLIS REGIONAL OFFICE

This office was established as a separate entity in 1946. Prior to this time the Indianapolis VA Hospital and the regional office operated as a combined facility under a single manager. The Indianapolis office carries on a wide variety of activities having to do in general with all services to veterans exclusive of hospital care. It, however, establishes eligibility for medical treatment. A separate Guidance Section is maintained for close contact with veterans throughout the state, and guidance centers are maintained, particularly in educational institutions.

The regional office also exercises general supervision over the Veterans Hospitals in the state; two at Indianapolis and one in Marion.

STATE DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS' AFFAIRS

This department was created by the state legislature in 1945 to assist Hoosier veterans in obtaining the benefits and advantages to which they were or might subsequently become entitled under the laws of Indiana and of the United States. It consists of a bi-partisan, four-member Veterans' Affairs Commission and a Director, together with his staff. The Commissioners and the Director must be honorably discharged veterans and are appointed by the Governor. Local offices of veterans' affairs, organized by communities in any way deemed desirable, were also authorized by the law. The relations of the state department with the local offices are purely advisory, educational, and promotional.

The veterans' offices in Indiana serve as centers to which the veteran can bring his problems in regard to housing, personal relationships, jobs, education, and service benefits. Some of these matters are referred immediately to other agencies such as the Veterans' Administration, the Employment Security Division or the State Employment Service. On the other hand, many of the benefits accruing to the veteran from state and federal legislation require actual administration by the state and local veterans' offices. The State Approval Committee, for example, was appointed by the Educational Director of the state office to designate the schools and training plans in which veterans could take advantage of their educational benefits. Early in 1946, the state department lent more than $105,000 temporarily to Hoosier veterans in the colleges when their VA checks were held up by the tremendous rush of business. The Public Relations department publishes a monthly Indiana Veterans' Review and numerous informational bulletins on special matters of interest to veterans. More than 35,000 Hoosier veterans took advantage of these services each month during the first year of the department's operation.

The following roster covers the period from the organization of the state department in April, 1945, to the end of 1946.

PLANNING AGENCIES

Grouped below are four state agencies of varying character which were concerned, in one way or another, with the business of planning for the smoother operation of government in relation to the economic and social life of the community. The planning involved immediate problems of wartime living and the more remote but no less important exigencies of the post-war period.

LEGISLATIVE BUREAU

As the agency responsible for writing most of the defense and wartime legislation passed by Indiana's General Assembly during World War II, the Legislative Bureau had a close relationship to the state's part in the war effort. The Bureau was created in 1939, as an independent agency for the use of legislators, administrative officials, state agencies, institutions, and citizens who desired assistance in research upon the drafting of measures for introduction into the General Assembly. Its work is carried on by a director and small staff of experts.

|---------------------|------------|-----------|
| Herbert P. Kenney   | New Albany | Director  |

DIVISION OF STATE PUBLICITY

This agency, in co-operation with the State Chamber of Commerce, carried on an active campaign from the beginning of the "defense" period to attract industries to Indiana and to help Hoosier manufacturers with war contracts to find sufficient space for their activities. The Division was abolished in 1945, and its functions were transferred to the newly-created Department of Commerce, Agriculture, Industry and Public Relations.

INDIANA COMMISSION ON INTERSTATE CO-OPERATION

From its organization in October, 1938, the Commission on Interstate Co-operation worked jointly with similar commissions of 43 other states to attack problems of interstate significance which did not come under the jurisdiction of the Federal Government. The Commission appointed a National Defense Committee from its own membership, to devise a special program of co-operation with neighboring states in matters of defense and warfare. By this device, Indiana and neighboring states were able to effect uniform motor transport standards, speed limits for automobile traffic, and civilian defense measures which were valuable contributions to the war effort.

During the war, the Commission was composed of eighteen members, three of whom—the Governor, Lt. Governor, and Speaker of the House—were honorary, non-voting members. Five members were Senators, appointed by the President of the Senate; five were members of the House, appointed by the Speaker; and the remaining five were state administrative officers, appointed by the Governor. The Commission is Indiana's participating unit in the Council of State Governments.

INDIANA STATE PLANNING BOARD

The State Planning Board was created by the legislature in 1935, at a time when economic planning was both necessary and popular. It was authorized to make investigations and surveys of the state's natural resources, to analyze and publish studies of the information thus gathered, and to recommend legislation and administrative measures designed to further the conservation, development, and proper utilization of these resources.

The board did its most effective work in the pre-war period when it was well supplied with federal funds. On the basis of its studies and assembled information, it was able to assist in the organization of the Governor's Emergency Defense Council and to furnish accurate county maps for the use of all the budding defense agencies. The board encouraged planning by local governmental units and sponsored a meeting of the National Conference on Planning in Indianapolis in May, 1942. Public absorption in the immediate problems of the war, however, led to a decline of interest in the work of this board, which was abolished by the legislature in 1943. Its records were turned over to the newly created Indiana Economic Council.<sup>1</sup>

The Planning Board consisted of eleven members, six of whom were ex officio state officials. The remaining five were appointed by the Governor. An Executive Secretary maintained the office and the board's day-by-day activities.

PART ELEVEN

PRIVATE ORGANIZATIONS IN DEFENSE

The earlier sections of this Directory contain abundant testimony to the fact that Hoosiers, through the media of their innumerable organizations, associations, societies, and clubs, were able to contribute their combined strength to the war effort. It is doubtful if a single organized body of Indiana citizens in existence during the war years failed to perform some war service.

In 1942, the Indiana Historical Records Survey of the WPA submitted to the State Defense Council a list of 1,394 civilian organizations in local communities which could be called upon for assistance of one kind or another. And yet, this survey covered only a few more than half the counties in the state. It is obvious that any effort to list even a tithe of these organizations in this Directory would be utterly impossible. Many of those which contributed most directly to war work have already been partially treated. In this section a few of the remaining ones will be included. They must be regarded, not as the organizations necessarily most deserving of mention, but as representative of many similar ones for which there is no space in this volume. The listing of organizations has been guided in part by relative importance and in part by availability of information. Many deserving groups must be omitted, but the following pages will preserve a record, however imperfect, of many Indiana citizens who helped their associations to compile a worthy record of war service.

PATRIOTIC ORGANIZATIONS

This section of the Directory includes organizations here labeled patriotic, not because they claim exclusive possession of patriotism, but because the inculcation of that virtue is one of their principal objectives. It includes veterans' groups, their auxiliaries, societies with membership based upon some relationship to servicemen, and one organization concerned solely with American policy in regard to World War II.

THE AMERICAN LEGION INDIANA DEPARTMENT

Veterans of World War I, the only war in history which had even approached in character and magnitude the nature of World War II, were better qualified than other citizens to understand the demands which modern war makes upon the civilian as well as the soldier. It was logical that their organization should assume the lead in nearly every step toward the establishment of civilian defense and support of the war effort.

With its national headquarters in Indianapolis, the American Legion has an intimate relationship with Indiana, and Hoosier Legionnaires were eager to support their claims to leadership. At every opportunity they urged universal military training, full recruitment of the armed forces, and adequate appropriations for defense.

From the beginning, the Legion was a mainspring of civilian defense. The Volunteer Participation Committee of the OCD was organized along lines suggested by the Legion's national office and previously worked out in local communities. The Indiana Department was represented on the Governor's Emergency Defense Council<sup>1</sup> and on every subsequent defense agency in the state. Early in 1941, the Department registered 26,000 Legionnaires who volunteered by vocations for emergency wartime services. At considerable cost in money and effort, the Legion assumed the responsibility for planning the Air Raid Warning Service, recruiting and training its personnel, and maintaining the network of stations.<sup>2</sup>

The Legion devised special techniques for stimulating the purchase of war bonds, such as "Penny Per Plane" clubs (one penny contributed toward stamp purchases for every enemy plane shot down). The Second War Loan drive, in the spring of 1943, was sponsored by the Legion. Indiana Posts exceeded their own goal for purchase of bonds by $11,000,000, and helped their fellow Hoosiers to buy 64% more than their quota.

In the business of maintaining home front morale, the Legion assumed a major responsibility. The Indiana Department's Speakers Bureau supplied a list of 90 qualified speakers to the State Defense Council, and these were used constantly at community mass meetings, "kick-off" dinners, rallies, and other occasions. Legionnaires were active in distributing "Keep Your Mouth Shut" and "Anti-Whispering" posters for the Office of War Information. Special services to members of the armed forces, such as automobile stickers offering free rides in Legionnaires' cars, and pamphlets explaining the legal benefits available to servicemen were sponsored. Legionnaires were everywhere active in local USO clubs and centers.

Legion Posts added to the particular activities outlined above a full range of organized efforts in salvage campaigns, victory book collections, blood donations, entertainment for servicemen, correspondence with overseas soldiers, and every phase of civilian defense. They continued their activities in sponsoring legislation for the benefit of the veteran, and opened their ranks to the servicemen returning from World War II.

AMERICAN LEGION AUXILIARY

On the day following Pearl Harbor, the National President of the American Legion Auxiliary wired the President of the United States a pledge of support and "every possible service in the present emergency. We are in it to the finish." Before that finish came in 1945, the 295 Auxiliary Units in Indiana had entered vigorously into every phase of home-front activity in which women could participate. National Defense and War Activities chairmen were appointed by the Department, by each District, and each Unit. They stimulated the recruitment of women for the armed services, took a special interest in the families of servicemen, participated actively in salvage drives, and co-operated fully with the State Defense Council, Red Cross, USO, Victory Book Collections, and similar projects. The most important field of work for the War Activities committees was in the bond-selling campaigns, where the Auxiliary distinguished itself by both its sales and purchases of bonds. A citation was received from the War Finance Division of the Treasury Department for this accomplishment.

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS OF THE UNITED STATES

The 42nd National Encampment of the Veterans of Foreign Wars at Philadelphia in August, 1941, adopted the following resolution—

"Whereas, it is generally recognized that individual freedom and liberty throughout the world are jeopardized by the acts of the leaders within certain nations who seek to impose their totalitarian doctrines on other nations by force of arms:

Be it Resolved, that the Veterans of Foreign Wars . . . go on record wholeheartedly endorsing and supporting those measures taken by the Government of the United States of America to defend and perpetuate the American way of life from any and all aggressors."

Immediately after the Philadelphia Encampment, Commander Lacey called the Indiana Council of Administration and his staff officers together for a conference which planned to implement the national program. From that moment until after the end of the war, Indiana's more than 200 V. F. W. posts acted upon the slogan, "Unity for Victory." They first turned their attention to the sale of defense bonds and stamps, then to an intensive campaign to secure cadets for the Army Air Force. No less than 300 young men were recruited and given preliminary training through this effort. A short time later, V. F. W. posts were called upon to assist in recruiting men for the rapidly expanding U. S. Navy and responded with such success as to merit a citation from the Navy Department.

Feeling that the war effort was not being taken with sufficient seriousness in some circles, the V. F. W. planned and staged a mammoth "Vitalize for War" parade in Indianapolis in May, 1942. Members and posts demonstrated their own enthusiasm by canvassing their towns for blood donors, participating in bond drives, assisting draft boards, creating and working in USO centers, and furnishing funds for servicemen stranded while on leave. The Rehabilitation Service of the V. F. W., organized and equipped to assist wounded veterans in every way possible, became increasingly important as the end of the war drew near. Hundreds of veterans and their dependents received invaluable aid in getting tangled allotment and benefit problems adjusted.

LADIES AUXILIARY, DEPARTMENT OF INDIANA VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS

The purpose of the Ladies Auxiliary of the VFW for nearly fifty years has been "to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow, and his orphan." Work with hospitalized soldiers and veterans was one of the principal contributions of this organization. Wheel chairs, fracture beds, iron lungs, and other pieces of equipment were donated. Entertainment and small gifts were constantly provided. The Indiana Auxiliary raised money for a special cottage at the VFW orphans' home in Eaton Rapids, Michigan. Auxiliary chapters were active in bond sales, blood donor campaigns, Red Cross work and every other phase of activity on the home front.

DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS

The Department of Indiana, Disabled American Veterans was organized November 22, 1932. During the period of World War II the organization had a membership of nearly three thousand. The DAV was chartered by the United States Congress "to uphold and maintain the Constitution and the laws of the United States, . . . to advance the interests and work for the betterment of all wounded, injured, and disabled American veterans; . . . and to encourage in all people that spirit of understanding which will guard against future wars."<sup>9</sup> Persons eligible for membership are men and women who were "wounded, gassed, injured or disabled in line of duty during time of war" while serving in the armed forces of the United States or an allied country. Promotion of rehabilitation programs by means of which disabled veterans can be trained for employment is the chief activity of the organization.

WOMEN'S OVERSEAS SERVICE LEAGUE

The Indianapolis Unit of the Women's Overseas Service League was organized on Armistice Day, 1920, and started working with the Army at Fort Harrison the following Christmas. The membership included women who had served overseas in World War I with the American Red Cross, Army Nurses Corps, YMCA, YWCA, Signal Corps, Ordnance Corps, Quartermaster and Medical Corps, Salvation Army, and various college units. In the years following, the League was active in providing trained hostesses for citizens military training camps and the Service Club in connection with Fort Harrison.

The task of the League increased in the fall of 1940 with the constantly mounting number of inductions. Members operated the Information Desk at the Fort Harrison Reception Center until it was moved to Camp Atterbury. In co-operation with other organizations, the League provided thousands of magazines and playing cards for the soldiers and promoted various recreational facilities at the Center. In November, 1942, camp shows were started at Camp Atterbury. The first WOSL Revue was given at Fort Harrison in January, 1941, the last "official army show" at Wakeman Hospital on December 15, 1946—a total of 1,539 "camp shows". Six hundred and three volunteers participated in the camp shows. A total of 89,250 miles were driven by various motor corps units in providing transportation.

The League is continuing its service through new World War II members who are working in local veterans hospitals and its WOSL Revue, given twice a month at the two veterans hospitals.

NATIONAL ORGANIZATION OF WORLD WAR NURSES DEPARTMENT OF INDIANA

Although the members of the World War Nurses organization were generally unable to enter active service with the armed forces in World War II because of age restrictions, they were in a key position to stimulate nurse recruitment, to release younger nurses for military service by returning to active duty on the home front, to serve as Red Cross first aid instructors, and to participate in civilian defense work. Assistance in the rehabilitation of wounded veterans is an important activity of this organization.

AMERICAN WAR DADS INDIANA STATE ASSOCIATION

American War Dads, "a non-partisan, non-sectarian, non-profit organization of American Fathers, in a nation-wide, unified, militant effort to preserve the American way of life and to safeguard the interests of America's fighting sons and daughters, both now and later", was organized in March, 1942, at Kansas City, Missouri. Active in every phase of the home front war effort, the American War Dads were particularly concerned with helping to maintain maximum war production, to promote effective administration of the war effort, and to obtain favorable post-war treatment for returning veterans.

FATHERS OF SONS IN SERVICE

This organization was incorporated under the laws of Indiana shortly after Pearl Harbor. Its membership qualifications and its objectives were very similar to those of American War Dads, of which it became a chapter in 1945. The Indianapolis chapter was quite strong, attaining a membership of 2,000. It was active in every endeavor to speed up the home front war effort and to serve the interests of the American youth in uniform.

MOTHERS OF WORLD WAR II

On March 2, 1942, a group of mothers of servicemen met at Gary and organized the Mothers of World War II. The organization was incorporated under the laws of Indiana but it rapidly acquired a national membership. Indiana has always been the leading state in this organization and national headquarters is established in Indianapolis. The state has 93 units at present and nearly 5,000 members, organized by congressional districts.

During the war years, the Mothers of World War II devoted most of their attention to providing comfort for the men and women in service. A 24-hour service for meeting troop trains with warm food, coffee, candy, and cigarettes was maintained in many Indiana towns. Close co-operation with USO and home hospitality for servicemen on leave featured each unit's program. These activities gave way in later years and particularly in the post-war period to services for wounded and hospitalized veterans. The Indiana units have raised money for the building of a chapel at the Cold Springs Road Veterans Hospital and for musical instruments, furniture, medical equipment, movie projectors, radios, and literature at other hospitals. The personal visits of members, who, by reason of their own sacrifices are best able to provide sympathetic understanding of the patient's condition, are perhaps their most important service.

AMERICAN WAR MOTHERS

This organization, instituted during World War I and given a congressional charter, was authorized to enlist mothers of World War II servicemen and women in 1942. It has developed an extensive program of services to members of the armed forces and to veterans, and of education in good citizenship. The best way, perhaps, to indicate the great variety of activities in which its Indiana chapters participated during the war, would be to list a few of them in detail.

Anderson, Haughville, and Indianapolis provided food and hostesses for the Senate Avenue Branch USO in Indianapolis.

Gary provided 16 ceiling projectors and microfilm books for Billings General Hospital.

Indianapolis USA Chapter served 70,000 meals at YMCA and Wabash Center.

Knightstown contributed generously to the orphanage there.

Lafayette, Frankfort, and Logansport furnished many gifts and services to inmates of the Soldier's Home.

Marion made gifts of flowers, books, draperies, and many comforts to Veterans Hospital.

Muncie established a 24-hour train-meeting service.

New Albany entertained soldiers from Camp Knox and Bowman Field with food and drink at the YMCA.

South Bend sent cards and boxes to every boy and girl in the armed services from St. Joseph County.

University Heights provided a lounge with cold milk, cookies, and free clothing repairs for trainees at Indiana Central College.

INDIANA DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION

A statistical summary will most readily present the war-time accomplishments of the Indiana Daughters of the American Revolution, one of the most active and perhaps the best known of all women's patriotic organizations. During the war years, in addition to their regular projects, the 91 chapters of the D. A. R. in Indiana—

Provided books, magazine subscriptions, phonograph records, puzzles, and money for the Wakeman General Hospital library;

Sent Christmas boxes, cards, candy, cakes, books, records, magazines, games and a Christmas tree to crew members of the LCI (L) 590;

Spent 395,067 hours in Red Cross work, and made 22,152 garments and articles;

Purchased $1,425 bonds and sold $325,000; individual members bought $1,002,500 in bonds;

Distributed 4,815 Manuals for Citizenship to naturalization courts, schools, and welfare centers;

Contributed $1,264.68 and materials to the occupational therapy unit in the Merchant Marine Hospital at Ellis Island;

Gave two blood plasma units to the Indianapolis Blood Donor Center, and $3,478.07 to the Blood Plasma Fund; 195 members became blood donors;

Made and sent 1,583 Buddy Bags.

The Junior Group gave 8 Foreign Body Locators to the armed forces, sent 7,000 Buddy Bags, and invested $500 in bonds.

INDIANA COMMITTEE FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE

In the first months after Hitler attacked Poland, when Americans were still much divided in their attitude toward the war, William Allen White and his associates formed the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies. The object of this group was to combat American isolationism and to develop public sentiment for providing every kind of aid possible to the nations fighting Germany and Japan. The Indiana Committee for National Defense was the Indiana affiliate of the White Committee.

Every device of publicity—press and radio, public dinners and celebrated speakers, pamphlets, and personal communication—was used by the Committee to influence public opinion. Local Committee members were added in nearly every city in Indiana. The organization took a deep interest in the problem of civilian defense and paved the way for the establishment of the Defense Councils on both the state and local levels. After Pearl Harbor, when the Committee felt that citizens were sufficiently aroused to fight fascism to the end, the formal organization was allowed to lapse into inactivity, and its members found their places in the war effort under other auspices.

YOUTH ORGANIZATIONS

The Second World War involved all citizens, from those in the cradle to many who entered the grave. It would be difficult for any age group to establish a better claim to whole-hearted participation in the war effort than that made by American youth. A few of the many organizations through which young people channeled their activities are listed below.

BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA

The services of the Boy Scout organization in times of peace as well as of war are so well known to every American that they hardly need to be catalogued. Whenever any war agency had a task which required many helping hands, Boy Scouts were sure to be called upon. They collected scrap, distributed literature, carried messages, marched in parades, solicited blood donors, sold bonds, entertained troops, ushered at public gatherings, and fulfilled splendidly the promise made by their national officers to President Roosevelt at the outbreak of war—"It will be our earnest purpose to embrace to the full measure of our capacity any and all other opportunities to render further service to our country".<sup>1</sup>

While the boys themselves performed the conspicuous services, their activity required careful planning which was the work of the adult leaders. The Boy Scout organization operates from national headquarters in New York through a corps of professional Executives working in close co-operation with volunteer adult leaders in each community. Local Councils, of which there are twenty in Indiana, are headed by a paid Executive and a Board of Directors, composed of local civic leaders who are interested in boys and who give their time without compensation to this program. Representatives from the local Councils are elected to a Regional Executive Committee and to a National Council. Under their direction and guidance, the scouting program is organized. The scoutmasters and troop committeemen of the local troops then put it into practice.

The war years not only demonstrated the unlimited capacity for community service in the Boy Scout organization, but stimulated a growth of 35 percent in membership within the state of Indiana. Since it is impossible to list here the thousands of scouts and scoutmasters who actually performed the services, we must be content with naming the adult leaders who served the local Councils and the Regional Committee during the war years.

GIRL SCOUTS OF THE U.S.A.

The activities of the Girl Scouts during World War II centered about two aspects of service; (1) service to girls by providing a program which would give security and insure the preservation of human values in time of stress, and (2) to give girls an opportunity to serve their country.

Between 1941 and 1945, the total Girl Scout membership in Indiana grew from 20,969 to 37,768. Approximately one-fourth of this increase consisted of adult volunteer leaders who attended training courses which stressed the adaptation of the Girl Scout program to the wartime needs of girls and communities.

The services actually carried out by the Girl Scouts included:

Conservation. Promoting conservation of food and clothing; Encouraging conservation of individual resources through a program of physical fitness; Collecting rubber, fats, tin cans, etc.

Hospital Service. Acting as aides in hospitals in children's wards; Setting up serving trays; Helping in sewing and surgical supply rooms; Assisting in hospital libraries.

Food. Growing victory gardens; Acting as Farm Aides; Preserving food. Child Care. Supervising small children at day camp; Helping at recreation centers for children of working parents; Assisting teachers at fire and air raid drills; Organizing backyard playgrounds for small children.

Civilian Defense. Mapping roads leading from towns, spotting bridges, water supply, etc.; Assisting air raid wardens; Identifying planes; Arranging first aid rooms at school; Setting up emergency communication plans.

Miscellaneous Services. Selling War Savings Bonds and Stamps; Typewriting; Mimeographing; Sorting and packing at war relief agencies; Releasing adults for war work by doing the above services.

Girl Scout wartime activities in the region of which Indiana is a part were directed generally by a Regional Committee, composed of representative adult leaders from each state. Indiana women who served on this Committee during the war years are listed below.

4-H CLUBS

Comprising the largest rural youth organization in the world, the 4-H Clubs, sponsored by the Extension Service of the Department of Agriculture, provided an educational channel through which a realization of the importance of agriculture to the war effort could be conveyed to Indiana farm boys and girls. It also provided the activity outlets through which their energies could be directed into useful projects.

In the early days of the world crisis, the 4-H Clubs adopted a seven point program for national defense. Briefly stated, these were—

1. Interpretation of the National Defense Program to the community;
2. Production of food and clothing for defense needs;
3. Conservation of human and natural resources;
4. Development of individual and community health;
5. Development of mechanical skills both for military and for home-front use;
6. Practice in and appreciation of democratic procedures;
7. Understanding the basic social and economic forces behind the world crisis.

The 50,000 boys and girls belonging to 4-H Clubs in Indiana carried out the seven point program with great enthusiasm. In 1944, they raised enough food products to feed 40,000 service men, and canned 210,000 quarts of it in club projects. In 1942, they collected 5,000,000 pounds of scrap metal and in 1944, 20,000 bags of milkweed pods. Club members purchased more than $3,000,000 in war bonds. They cultivated annually more than 2,000 acres of Victory Gardens, 27,000 acres of food crops, and 1,200 acres of forests.

4-H Club work is the immediate responsibility of the Agricultural Extension Service, working through Purdue University and the county agents. Nearly 8,000 local volunteer leaders co-operated with these professional workers in carrying out the program. Only the staff located at Purdue University during the war years is listed below.

INDIANA RURAL YOUTH

The Indiana Rural Youth, organized November 16, 1938, is a state federation of county clubs, sponsored by the Department of Education of the Indiana Farm Bureau, Inc. The basic broad aims are "Education, Recreation and Community Service." In 1945, approximately eighty counties had these clubs composed of rural young people between the ages of 18 and 28. During the war period, these members rendered service on the farm, in factories, and on military fronts.

Special training schools are sponsored each year at Purdue University in co-operation with the Farm Bureau. Educational tours are a feature of the post-war club activities.

The state organization is guided by the director of the Farm Bureau's Department of Education, and governed directly by a member board of directors, composed of the five elected state officers and the chairmen of the ten Rural Youth districts.

FUTURE FARMERS OF AMERICA

The Future Farmers of America is an organization for boys enrolled in high school classes of vocational agriculture. The primary aim of this organization is the development of agricultural leadership, co-operation, and citizenship. Projects in which the skills and knowledge learned in vocational agriculture are applied under supervised direction constitute one important means of attaining this goal. During the war period, the Indiana State F.F.A. was alert to its responsibilities in the war effort. When formulating its annual program of work each year at its state convention, the group provided for a Victory Committee, whose duty it was to develop recommendations to the State Association and its member chapters for activities in meeting war goals. The intensified war program placed emphasis upon (1) increased production by means of improved practices, (2) care and repair of farm machinery, (3) training and placement of farm labor, and (4) conservation of food, health, time, and all salvage materials.

CATHOLIC YOUTH ORGANIZATION

The Catholic Youth Organization is a national federation of pre-existing youth groups and is affiliated with the Youth Department of the National Catholic Welfare Conference. The C.Y.O. in each diocese is autonomous, under the direction of the archbishop or bishop as Director General, assisted by an advisory board made up of representatives from each deanery, and under the personal supervision of the C.Y.O. Director. Each Parish C.Y.O. Chapter is directed by the pastor or his assistant together with an advisory committee and the elected officers of the chapter.

The C.Y.O. gathers the Catholic youth and youth groups into its membership in order to promote their spiritual and temporal welfare through the medium of a balanced program of spiritual, cultural, physical, social, and vocational activities. It played an important role during the war years by giving parish servicemen's parties, providing hostesses for the Catholic U.S.O., visiting hospitals, sending monthly news bulletins to C.Y.O. members in the service, arranging activities for the children of parents working in war plants, participating in salvage drives, and by daily prayers for peace and the safety of the boys and girls in the service.

PROFESSIONAL ORGANIZATIONS

Listed here are a number of associations of professional men and women. Others have already been treated in earlier sections. The Indiana State Bar Association, for example, is listed in connection with its principal wartime contribution, the Free Legal Assistance committees.<sup>1</sup> The section on the Victory Book Collection contains the names of all members of the Indiana Library Association.<sup>2</sup> Many professional organizations are simply mentioned in the text. Many more cannot even be mentioned. The few included in this section were more closely identified with the war, perhaps, than those which have been omitted.

INDIANA STATE MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

The Indiana State Medical Association organized for defense on a state-wide basis on October 12, 1939, when its House of Delegates created a Mobilization Day and Veterans' Affairs Committee and voted to have similar committees named by all the association's county societies. At the ninetyeth annual session of the association, it was resolved that

"... the Indiana State Medical Association constitute and empower a committee to act in liaison with proper military and civil authorities, and veterans' organizations to make a complete study for, and prepare a detailed program for medical cooperation and preparedness in the event of M-day becoming a reality, to the end that in such event an unhurried and effective program is established, supplying first: the medical needs of the military; second: the proper medical care at home during a military emergency."<sup>3</sup>

Action upon this resolution gave the ISMA the distinction of being the first medical society in America to take an active part in national defense.

With the passage of the Selective Service Act, the medical profession became indispensable to the proper functioning of local selective service boards. A list of 400 doctors to be appointed as examining physicians and medical advisory board members was prepared by the M-Day Committees and placed on the Adjutant-General's desk on the morning after the law went into effect.<sup>4</sup>

Doctors and nurses were also deeply involved in the organization of civilian defense, particularly in the Emergency Medical Services. Names of individuals serving in such capacities will be found in the section of this book on Civilian Defense.

In January, 1944, responding to a request from the State Office of Price Administration, President Oliphant of the ISMA appointed a committee to co-operate in making plans for food rationing. The committee enlisted the support of a similar group from the Indianapolis Dietitians' Association. Most of the county medical societies appointed local OPA advisory committees.

As the end of the war drew near, committees were appointed to deal with post-war problems, almost as vexing to the medical profession as those of wartime. A Medical Advisory Committee for Vocational Rehabilitation was appointed to work with state agencies in the important field of restoring handicapped veterans to employable status. The details of an agreement between the ISMA and the Veterans Administration for the medical care of veterans with service-connected disabilities were arranged by a Committee for Medical Care to Veterans. To meet the manifold requirements of the returning veterans in the profession itself, Committees on Postwar Medical Service and Veterans' Affairs were established. They sought to aid in re-establishing practices and offices, in procuring housing for and in continuing the education of physician veterans.

<sup>4</sup> For the names of these doctors, see the section on Selective Service, pp. 121-63, 193-98. The M-Day Committee later became the Procurement and Assignment Committee, for which see pp. 199-203. M.D.'s are omitted from physician's names in this roster because of space limitations.

In all of these wartime emergencies, the regularly elected officers of the Association, the Councilors of the thirteen districts in Indiana, the executive secretary and his staff, the editor of the Journal, and the members of the standing committees did yeoman service.

INDIANA STATE DENTAL ASSOCIATION

The Indiana State Dental Association set for itself four major objectives to be striven for throughout the war period: (1) to furnish the state's quota of dentists for the military services; (2) to provide adequate dental service for the civilian population; (3) to maintain adequate facilities for the training of dental students; (4) to promote a program for the education of the public to the importance of dental health.

Credit for the attainment of the first two objectives goes principally to Dr. H. T. Berkey of Fort Wayne and the members of his Procurement and Assignment Committee.<sup>5</sup> Dr. E. L. Mitchell of Indianapolis, Chairman of the Advisory Council, was responsible for a high degree of success in meeting the home-front goals of the Association.

In co-operation with local Selective Service boards, 1,230 members of the Indiana State Dental Association contributed services gratis, or at reduced rates, to make eligible for military service an approximately equal number of selectees in Indiana who otherwise would have been disqualified because of bad teeth.<sup>6</sup>

INDIANA STATE NURSES' ASSOCIATION

The objectives of this Association, as related to the war effort, were as follows:

(1) To expedite the application of graduate registered nurses for commissions in the nursing services of the armed forces;

(2) To increase the enrollment of students in schools of nursing;

(3) To "maintain the home-front" through

(a) enlisting the active assistance of retired and married graduate nurses;

(b) developing plans of action to meet local disasters and needs.

These activities were under way in 1940 and continued throughout the war. In co-operation with the U. S. Public Health Service, in 1941 and again in 1943, a statewide survey of graduate registered nurses was conducted. In co-operation with the Procurement and Assignment Service, War Manpower Commission, the classification of graduate nurses for essential nursing positions was undertaken in April, 1944, and continued henceforward.

The enrollment of students for schools of nursing was extended to include co-operation with the recruitment program of the National Nursing Council for War Service and of the U. S. Cadet Nurse Corps.

Of the approximately 10,000 nurses, of all ages, in the state, more than 1,200 entered military service and 6,000 engaged in active duty in the state.

The tremendous wartime demand for nurses placed great burdens upon the agencies which normally recruit, educate and certify aspirants to the nursing profession. Among these, all closely connected with the Indiana State Nurses' Association, were the Indiana League of Nursing Education, the schools of nursing, and the State Board of Examination and Registration of Nurses. The women who administered these agencies displayed commendable zeal and courage in their efforts to eliminate the shortage of trained nurses during the war period.

NURSING COUNCILS FOR WAR SERVICE

As the nation's manpower was fully mobilized in war industry and the armed forces, the increasing problem of providing nursing service for civilian and military needs challenged not only the nursing profession but the consumers of nursing services as well. Assuming primary responsibility and leadership, the American Nurses' Association pooled the efforts and thinking of nursing, hospital, medical, public health, civilian protection, educational, social, and lay groups in a National Nursing Council for War Service, Inc. This organization was reproduced on a state level by a State Council, which, in turn, sponsored the creation of local councils on a county or group of counties basis. While the Nursing Councils for War Service assumed a wide variety of responsibilities, their most important work was performed by two committees; the Procurement and Assignment Committee, which co-operated with the War Manpower Commission in finding nurses for essential military duties; and the Committee on Recruitment of Students, which attempted to keep the supply of trained nurses equal to the abnormal demand. These committees likewise functioned on the state and on the local level.

INDIANA ASSOCIATION OF OPTOMETRISTS

The principal wartime obligation assumed by the Indiana Association of Optometrists was that of safeguarding the essential vision of workers in the state's war industries. An Industrial Vision Conference was held in 1944, with safety and personnel directors from plants throughout the state. Many optometrists served in advisory capacities with regard to visual safety in war plants. These services were the special responsibility of the State Chairman on Industrial Vision Activities.

INDIANA ASSOCIATION OF OSTEOPATHIC PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS

As qualified first aid instructors, Indiana's osteopathic physicians found places for themselves in the Red Cross, Civilian Defense, the State Guard, the Voluntary Auxiliary Police and Firemen, and other civilian wartime activities. Due to the shortage of medical physicians throughout the state, osteopathic physicians were called upon to give professional services to a greater number of people, not only in a strictly manipulative field but also as general practitioners and in several of the specialty fields.

The Indiana Association of Osteopathic Physicians and Surgeons gave its full support to the war effort. Special committees were appointed to co-operate with Selective Service and Civilian Defense, and to provide proper care for returning veterans.

INDIANA PHARMACEUTICAL ASSOCIATION

The Association membership consists of 1,100 Registered Pharmacists in Indiana. Approximately 1,000 of the members are proprietors of Indiana drug stores.

In wartime, civilian pharmacists occupied a key position for the protection of the public health and the conservation of critical drugs and materials. The war activities of the Association may be summarized as follows:

(1) Participation as a Member Association of the Emergency Medical Service of the Indiana Civilian Defense Council, and the training of pharmacists in First Aid;

(2) Collection of tin tubes and donations of quinine to the War Production Board;

(3) Sales of War Bonds and Stamps in drug stores;

(4) Establishment of publicity and scholarship programs to encourage high school students, particularly girls, to study pharmacy in order to provide replacements for the pharmacists in the Armed Forces;

(5) Establishment of a War Activities Committee, the principal duty of which was to act as a Pharmacists' Procurement and Assignment Committee for Indiana State Selective Service Headquarters. Four hundred and thirty-four of the State's 2,000 practicing pharmacists served in the Armed Forces;

(6) Co-operation with the Office of Price Administration, leading to the prevention of inflationary prices in drugs and household remedies.

INDIANA FUNERAL DIRECTORS ASSOCIATION

In the early days of civilian defense, the Indiana Funeral Directors Association made a survey of the entire state, plotting the location of ambulances, drivers, and first aid equipment for possible use in the event of air raids. This survey is still on file. Funeral directors were represented on every county civilian defense council,<sup>13</sup> and co-operated with other war agencies in every possible manner.

Within the profession itself, the Association planned to help returning servicemen who wished to become funeral directors by setting up an extensive State Rehabilitation Committee.

INDIANA STATE TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION

The Indiana State Teachers' Association, which, since its organization in 1854, has encouraged progress in the public school system and guarded the interests of teachers and pupils, assumed new duties with the outbreak of war. Its field services, research activities, and publications were focused upon the problems created by the war. The legislative committee redoubled its efforts to sponsor laws which would protect the interests of teachers in service, of school corporations deprived of such teachers, and of pupils who suffered from the diversion of public interest from education to war. The Association was particularly successful in persuading the state government to raise its annual contribution for the support of local school systems from sixteen million dollars to twenty-six million dollars.

In addition to its regular committees, the ISTA created an Indiana Committee for the NEA War and Peace Fund which raised some fourteen thousand dollars to improve school conditions throughout the nation. The War Bond Committee of the ISTA devised means by which the public schools of Indiana sold more than $80,000,000 worth of war bonds and stamps.

HOOSIER STATE PRESS ASSOCIATION

Organized in 1933, the Hoosier State Press Association had survived the growing pains of its early years and was in a strong position to meet the demands occasioned by the war. Since the organization had been established to "safeguard and advance the newspaper profession and business in the State of Indiana" the Association was obligated to a two-way program throughout the war years (1) to protect newspapers in their business operations and constitutional rights, and (2) to aid the various governmental war agencies in the vital field of communications and propaganda.

Even before the declaration of war, the Hoosier State Press Association granted leave of absence to its directing head at the request of the U. S. Treasury to organize Indiana's ninety-two counties for promoting the purchase of Defense Bonds.<sup>14</sup> As a result, many of the county war bond committees were headed by publishers and attaches of local newspapers. As an organization, the Hoosier State Press Association, through its more than 200 member newspapers, sponsored and promoted War Bond campaigns, spearheaded salvage drives, and aided in the administration of the Code of Voluntary Censorship set up for all communications media. The Association also co-operated with every governmental war agency in disseminating to its membership and interpreting the information necessary for public compliance with the wartime directives of those agencies. In that respect it served in the role of liaison between the government and the readers of newspapers in Indiana.

BUSINESS ORGANIZATIONS

Into the battle for full production, completely dedicated to the achievement of victory, the businessmen, employers, producers, owners, and managers of Indiana's business enterprise threw their organized strength. A complete picture of Indiana's contribution to the war effort would demand the inclusion in this Directory of all those who manufactured, mined, processed, transported, bought and sold under government contract during the war years. The list would be very long—far too long for publication here. For practical purposes, this Directory lists those business associations especially involved in the war effort as representative of business enterprise as a whole.

INDIANA STATE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

In many respects, the State Chamber of Commerce acted as the nerve center of Indiana's war production. The businessmen who made up its officers and board of directors were busy in their own factories and offices with supplying the necessities of war. Its executive vice-president also served as Director of the State Defense Council and the other members of the executive staff were constantly engaged in war-related activities. It acted in many ways as the liaison between Hoosier businessmen and the federal war agencies, particularly the Office of Price Administration, the War Production Board, the War Manpower Commission, and the National War Labor Board. It strongly supported the USO, the war bond drives, the scrap drives, the appeals of the Red Cross, and every other community enterprise connected with the war. On the local level, city chambers of commerce were equally involved in every war activity which affected the community as a whole, and the businessman in particular. Their officers and directorates may be considered as representative of the Hoosier entrepreneur in his role of citizen soldier.

ASSOCIATED EMPLOYERS OF INDIANA

This organization of employers, founded in 1904, is devoted to the establishment of sound and amicable labor relations in business and industry in Indiana. During the war, it was especially active in providing information and services which helped its members conform to the host of new governmental laws, rules, and regulations in the field of employment relations. Since the production of war material depended upon continued and uninterrupted employment, the services of the organization in fostering this condition were an important contribution to the war effort.

INDIANA BANKERS ASSOCIATION

Organized in 1897, the Indiana Bankers Association now includes 97 percent of the state's banks, loan and trust companies, and savings institutions. It is governed by a Council of Administration composed of the state officers and the presidents and immediate past-presidents of each of the association's nine regional groups.

Indiana banking was represented in World War II by 126 national banks with 13 branches and 370 state-chartered banks and trust companies with 64 branches. Adopting the motto, "Selling War Bonds Is Our Business," the bankers became the super-bond-salesmen of World War II. The officers of the Indiana Bankers Association were virtually identical with the Financial Division of the Indiana War Finance Committee.<sup>1</sup> The banks not only purchased more than their quota of each of the great war loans but they sold more bonds to the general public than did any other single agency. The result was achieved by the unsparing use of every known sales and advertising medium—newspapers, magazines, radio, direct mail, lobby displays, and personal solicitation.

At the request of the U. S. Treasury Department, the banks also acted as custodians and bookkeepers in administering the rationing system. Merchants deposited their ration coupons as they did their cash receipts, and the banks balanced their accounts.

In somewhat the same way, the banks served as financial agents of the Treasury in administering the 20 percent withholding tax, accepting deposits of these funds from employers and notifying the government of their amount.

In performing these heavy wartime duties with decreased staff and little added compensation, Indiana's bankers made a major contribution to victory.

INDIANA ELECTRIC ASSOCIATION

Ninety-five percent of the electrical power which turned the wheels of Indiana's war industry came from the generators of the twelve corporations which composed the Indiana Electric Association. Together with the smaller municipally owned plants and the out-of-state companies which furnished power for Indiana's needs, they performed an indispensable war service in the face of great difficulties. By increasing the generating capacity of Indiana plants twenty-three percent and transmission line mileage nearly twenty percent, the electrical industry was able to meet the enormous increase in the demand for power from approximately three billion kilowatt hours in 1940 to nearly five and a half billion at the peak of war production in 1944.

An inter-state committee, composed of representatives of the major power companies in the Indiana area, was responsible for much of the success of this program. Close cooperation with state and federal agencies, careful planning and co-ordination with war industries, and a scrupulous conservation of scarce materials made certain that no delay in war production was ever caused by a power shortage.

INDIANA TELEPHONE ASSOCIATION

Fast, dependable telephone service is indispensable in a war of distance, movement, production, and speed. The more than 350 telephone companies in Indiana were on the front lines of the civilian war effort.

The growth of defense industry increased the demand for telephone service at the same time that the scarcity of such basic materials as copper and rubber inhibited the manufacture of new equipment. With the actual coming of war, the building of new plants and army camps increased the load of both local and long distance traffic tremendously. The telephone companies made every effort to maintain essential communication, conserve vital materials, give priority to war messages, and to explain the necessary curtailment of telephone service to the public.

In meeting these extraordinary problems, the individual companies were aided by the Indiana Telephone Association, composed of firms which provided ninety percent of the telephone service in the state.

WAR ACTIVITIES COMMITTEE OF THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY

Because of the strategic role which the motion picture industry could play, both in maintaining the morale of the fighting forces and in selling war bonds, the War Activities Committee was organized at the direct request of the Secretary of the Treasury, Henry Morgenthau. National headquarters was maintained in New York and a number of divisions, one of which consisted of Indiana and Kentucky, were established throughout the country. The Indiana-Kentucky Division of the War Activities Committee maintained headquarters in the offices of the Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana in Indianapolis.

The work of the Indiana War Activities Committee revolved principally about the selling of war bonds and consisted of the following activities: (1) Continuous sale of war bonds in the lobbies of Indiana theatres with screen trailers urging their purchase, (2) Arrangement of bond premieres, in which special shows with Hollywood personalities were staged in Indiana theatres, admission being by bond purchase, (3) Arrangements for bond-selling tours of Indiana towns, war plants, stores, etc., by noted motion picture stars, (4) Staging of special war bond rallies in such places as the Indianapolis Coliseum with a variety of "stunts" designed to stimulate the sale of bonds.

One third of the total number of bonds sold during the war was attributed to the efforts of the 17,000 theatres which were enrolled in the records of the War Activities Committee.

LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

Officers and members of labor organizations were active in civilian defense activities during the war. They served on rationing boards and participated as leaders or members of protection units. For the most part, the no-strike pledge was observed and laborers put in many hours of overtime in order that production goals might be met. Many from the ranks of labor served in the armed forces. The unions co-operated with employers in making arrangements for the re-employment of men returning from military service. Labor can be justly proud of the part it had in winning the war.

Many international labor unions have their headquarters in Indianapolis or other Indiana cities, and throughout the war years, Indiana labor held a position of leadership in the war economy. It is manifestly impossible, in this Directory, to mention all the Hoosier labor leaders who made significant contributions to the war effort in their regular jobs. What has been attempted here is the reduction of the complex pattern of labor organization to its simplest factors by the listing of state headquarters for the major independent groups.

INDIANA STATE FEDERATION OF LABOR

The Indiana State Federation of Labor was organized in September, 1885. "Membership of this organization is composed of Local Unions, Lodges, Divisions of National and International Organizations, Federal Labor Unions, Central Labor Bodies, Trades Councils, State Associations of Organizations affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, Union Label Leagues and Women's Auxiliaries to these Organizations."<sup>1</sup>

UNITED MINE WORKERS OF AMERICA
DISTRICT NO. 11

District No. 11, United Mine Workers of America, was organized January 25, 1890. Miners in the Knights of Labor and miners in the National Progressive Union banded together and formed the U.M.W.A. Theoretically the organization covers the entire state but actually it is concentrated in the coal fields of the Wabash Valley. The area is divided into four sub-districts each of which is represented on the District Board. Principal aims of the U.M.W.A. are to improve the working conditions of active miners and to provide for disabled or aged miners.

RAILWAY BROTHERHOODS

The great international unions of railway workers have remained separate from each other and from the large federations of labor organizations, although they co-operate closely with these for the common objectives of labor. Their help in keeping the railway system of the United States functioning under the terrific strain of wartime transport was a major contribution to victory. Only principal leaders of their brotherhoods in Indiana are listed below.

AGRICULTURAL ORGANIZATIONS

The part which Indiana's farmers played in bringing victory to the United Nations is treated in general in Part Six of this Directory.<sup>1</sup> To the governmental agencies listed therein are added here a few of the private agricultural organizations through which the modern farmer works in co-operation with his fellows to achieve his many objectives.

INDIANA FARM BUREAU, INCORPORATED

The Indiana Farm Bureau, largest organization of Hoosier farmers, was incorporated in 1919 to cope with the serious economic, legislative, educational, social, and cultural problems then facing Indiana farm families. The original corporation has limited itself very largely to functions in the latter categories. Many types of co-operative marketing, purchasing, and insurance activities are sponsored by the Indiana Farm Bureau, but are separately incorporated. Sixteen of these affiliated corporations had been established by 1946.

Within the original corporation, seven departments dealing with such matters of immediate interest to farmers as taxes and legislation, livestock marketing, research, and information have been established. An important part of the Farm Bureau, particularly in relation to the war effort, was the Social and Educational Department, which is composed of women's activities. It participated actively in all salvage, relief, and bond-selling campaigns. The Department of Education is also significant because of its work with the Indiana Rural Youth organization.

During the war the Indiana Farm Bureau, Inc., devoted its efforts wholeheartedly to the promotion of food production, bond purchases, and the manpower programs of the various federal agencies.

Indiana. The county bureaus are further broken down into township units, with nearly 900 townships organized in 1946. Bureau membership increased from approximately 60,000 farm families in 1941 to 72,000 in 1946.

The Indiana Farm Bureau, Inc., is governed by a Board of Directors composed of thirteen members, ten of whom are elected from their respective Farm Bureau districts. The remaining three are Directors-at-large, elected in the annual convention of the Bureau by county delegates. The Directors-at-large are the President and the first and second Vice-Presidents of the state organization.

INDIANA STATE GRANGE

The Indiana State Grange, a unit of the National Grange, was organized at Terre Haute on February 28, 1872. There was rapid growth in the early years and peak strength was reached about 1900. Difficulties arising from over-emphasis on state and local co-operative activities plus neglect of the broader field of social and educational service caused a decline in membership and number of local units.

Efforts of the Grange members who remained on the roll in Indiana, aided by the appeal of the social program of the National Grange, were successful in checking the decline and bringing about a revival of interest and activity of the Subordinate Granges.

In 1946 there were 53 Subordinate Granges in Indiana representing more than 26 counties. At that time there were eight Pomona Granges organized on a county or district basis which may embrace two or three counties.

The State Grange is a delegate body made up only of state officers and delegates from the various counties. Annual meetings are held each October.

Standing committees and the office of lecturer within each unit promote the social, educational and legislative program of the organization. Co-operation with local and state defense groups and the promotion of agricultural production featured the service of the Grange during the war period.

INDIANA STATEWIDE RURAL ELECTRIC CO-OPERATIVE, INC.

The Indiana Statewide Rural Electric Co-operative, Inc., was organized in 1935. The purpose of its organization was to promote and encourage the establishment of local rural electric co-operatives through which loans were made by the Rural Electrification Administration. In 1946, there were 43 Indiana co-operatives serving practically the entire state. They had in excess of 80,000 members. It was estimated that more than 70 percent of Indiana farms had electric service in 1946. This electrification of Indiana's farms provided a much-needed source of power for the augmented tasks of wartime production.

RELIGIOUS ORGANIZATIONS

In a war being fought, in part at least, for "Freedom of Worship," the churches probably did more than any other organized group to sustain civilian morale and to provide a great backlog of spiritual support for the military forces. They did it, however, in a less organized and less tangible fashion than any other agency. The peculiarly rugged individualism of American religious organization makes no place for an agency or corporate body which could even remotely claim to represent all the churches in their united relationship to the war.

If the records of any individual congregation, synagogue, presbytery, conference, or diocese in Indiana were searched, instances could be found of special efforts made to serve members in the armed forces, to provide chaplains, to comfort bereaved families, to support USO Clubs, to provide for conscientious objectors ( a group largely ignored by all other agencies), to furnish community leadership in recreation, to extend religious ministry into war-born areas, to give moral support to such agencies as OPA which required public acceptance, and to acquaint the people with the fundamental issues of the war and the post-war periods. There was, however, no over-all organization which could give this expenditure of effort any co-ordination. In lieu of such, the Directory presents here the personnel of a few of the state-wide religious agencies, Protestant, Catholic and Jewish, which may serve as tokens for the rest.

Six of the most important national religious organizations combined their efforts in the war's most striking example of co-operative action, the USO. These were, again:

- The National Catholic Community Service
- The National Jewish Welfare Board
- The National Travelers Aid Association
- The Salvation Army
- The Young Men's Christian Association
- The Young Women's Christian Association

The principal Indiana leaders of these organizations may be found in the section of this Directory dealing with the USO.<sup>1</sup>

INDIANA COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

The Indiana Council of Churches was organized in 1943 for the purpose of promoting the spirit of oneness among the churches of Indiana, and to furnish an interdenominational agency for co-operation in all practical fields of Christian life.

The following twelve denominations affiliated with the Council:

|                                    |                         |
|------------------------------------|-------------------------|
| Baptist                            | Friends (Fr.)           |
| Church of the Brethren (Brethren)  | Episcopal (Epis.)       |
| Congregational Christian (C. C.)   | Methodist (Meth.)       |
| Disciples of Christ (Disc.)        | Moravian (Mor.)         |
| Evangelical (Evan.)                | Presbyterian (Presb.)   |
| Evangelical and Reformed (E. & R.) | United Brethren (U. B.) |

Two interdenominational agencies are also affiliated—the Indiana Council of Christian Education and the Indiana Council of Church Women.

INDIANA COUNCIL OF CHURCH WOMEN

The Indiana Council of Church Women, which is affiliated with the national United Council of Church Women and, since 1943, with the Indiana Council of Churches, is composed of local Protestant church women's groups within the state. Its purpose is to unify the efforts of church women in the task of establishing a Christian social order in all areas of life. Its normal program is primarily educational and inspirational.

During the war, the Council of Church Women promoted especially the making of USO Scrapbooks for distribution to military hospitals, participation in U.N.R.R.A. drives, the provision of 450,000 garments for Filipinos (Bundles for America), and work among migrant workers in the state. Post-war planning included more active participation in health campaigns, in legislative programs for Christianizing the social order, and in the movement toward world unity and peace.

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH

At the beginning of the war, the Catholic churches of Indiana were organized in three dioceses with episcopal seats at Fort Wayne, Lafayette, and Indianapolis. In December, 1944, the Indianapolis Diocese became an Archdiocese and two of its former districts were organized into the Diocese of Evansville.

Both the clergy and the lay organizations of the Catholic church supported the war effort in every possible way, spiritually and materially. In connection with civilian defense, the Most Rev. Joseph E. Ritter, Bishop of the Indianapolis Diocese, called upon his priests to take an active part in local Defense Councils and to appoint parish committees to assist in providing support for defense activities from all Catholic groups. In towns where more than one parish existed, the Bishop appointed a priest to represent the church in these matters. As an example of Catholic co-operation in civilian defense, this organization is given below.

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CATHOLIC WOMEN

The National Council of Catholic Women, a department of the National Catholic Welfare Council, is the medium through which lay Catholic women may speak and act as a unit on all problems of public interest. Each archdiocese and diocese in Indiana has its own Council, which federates all parish organizations of Catholic women, and is governed by a Council Board, consisting of the council officers, district presidents, committee chairmen, and delegates from group units, together with the spiritual authorities of the diocese.

Catholic women participated enthusiastically in the work of all such wartime agencies as Red Cross, USO, War Finance Committee, OPA, OCD, and UNRRA. They were especially active in service to wounded veterans and in relief campaigns. A service which they were peculiarly fitted to render was that of furnishing mass kits ($150), vestments, etc., to the Chaplains' Aid Association, and religious articles to members of the armed forces. German prayer books were given to prisoners of war in this country and Catholic literature distributed to camps and hospitals. Catholic women's organizations gave much thought to post-war planning and their strong support to the United Nations.

THE JEWISH COMMUNITY

If the wartime services of any segment of Indiana's population were to be set apart from others, the preceding pages of this Directory would furnish ample evidence that Hoosiers of Jewish origin provided leadership in every civilian activity, from government to war production, and from USO to OPA. The various Jewish congregations in Indiana cities were zealous in identifying the national cause with their own religious life. Jewish organizations such as B'nai B'rith instituted war service committees which devoted intense thought and effort to the promotion of bond sales, of blood donor campaigns, of scrap drives, and of a great variety of services to those in uniform.

As representatives of this general contribution to the war effort on the part of the Jewish community, the rabbis of Indiana congregations and the presidents of B'nai B'rith lodges in Indiana during the war period are here listed.

POLITICAL ORGANIZATIONS

The great world wars of the twentieth century have compelled the democracies, at least in theory, to lay aside politics "for the duration." This did not mean, however, that people so politically minded as Hoosiers should cease to think about the subject nor abandon their organizations devoted either to filling public offices or to seeing that they were well filled. There are many groups in Indiana whose programs might be called primarily or incidentally political. Four eminent representatives of these groups are listed in this section.

INDIANA LEAGUE OF WOMEN VOTERS

"In a real sense the League feels it should be reborn to do some of the tasks in some of the ways it has known before in teaching both itself and others an understanding of government, but adjusted to the new requirements of winning the war, and winning the peace thereafter." Taken from a declaration issued by an emergency meeting of the General Council of the League, held at Indianapolis on January 8, 1942, this statement summarizes the rather unique contribution made by the League of Women Voters to the successful prosecution of the war. While members of the League did their full share in civilian defense, USO, and all other voluntary war programs, the organization set itself the particular task of educating the citizen in the issues of war and peace. By means of pamphlets, broadsides, newspaper stories, and public meetings, the 23 Local Leagues in Indiana clarified such issues as the battle of production, wartime taxation, war bond purchases, civilian defense, the rationing program, the dangers of inflation, manpower mobilization, the civil service, lend-lease and foreign policy, trade agreements, and the conferences at Dumbarton Oaks and San Francisco which led to the creation of the United Nations. Shortly after Pearl Harbor, a majority of the League members signed definite pledges to devote a certain number of hours each week to wartime service. Their efforts did much to keep not only women voters, but all Indiana citizens, informed upon the difficult problems of the war years.

INDIANA MUNICIPAL LEAGUE

The Indiana Municipal League, composed of mayors and other municipal officials from 527 cities and towns in the state, is a non-partisan organization seeking to improve municipal government by co-ordinated action and the exchange of information. Members of the League played important roles in civilian defense and other war agencies.<sup>2</sup> Its effectiveness in linking local government with the state and national war effort can be gauged in part by the following resolutions, adopted in annual meetings of the League:

"In this national emergency each city and town is a link in the chain of a powerful national and state government and our national and state governments can be strong only if our cities and towns remain alert and active." October 16, 1941.

"WHEREAS successful and speedy termination of the war to preserve the lives and liberties of the people of America is the first and most important problem of the nation today:

BE IT RESOLVED that the League again reaffirms its pledge and offers the full co-operation of all of its facilities, resources and efforts to the national war effort and to the winning of the war." October 6, 1944.

"BE IT RESOLVED that we, the members of the Indiana Municipal League, being deeply conscious of our duties and responsibility toward the rehabilitation of our physical assets and also to the rehabilitation of our returning men and women in the armed forces, and with the end of the war near at hand, we dedicate ourselves to the solution of the problems that must inevitably come with peace." October 6, 1944.

DEMOCRATIC PARTY STATE ORGANIZATION

Since the Democratic Party provided the executive leadership for the state during the pre-war and war years, it bore the major responsibility for co-ordinating state and national government in the war effort. Democratic leaders initiated such organizations as civilian defense, selective service, the rationing boards and salvage committees. On the whole, however, these wartime bodies were maintained on an admirably non-partisan or bipartisan basis and citizens of all political affiliations were thereby encouraged to contribute their services to the ultimate goal of victory.

The Indiana Democratic organization offered its offices and staff to the civilian defense council in the event of a serious emergency, and it co-operated actively with the War Finance Committee, the Indiana Salvage Committee, the Office of Price Administration and all groups engaged in war-related activities.

REPUBLICAN PARTY STATE ORGANIZATION

From 1941 to 1945, the Republican Party held control of both branches of the state legislature and of all the elective executive offices except that of Governor. In such a situation, partisan politics might easily have crippled Indiana's war effort. It is a tribute to Indiana Republicans that, although their representatives quarreled with the Governor on many domestic issues, there was no political interference with the national war effort. On the contrary, the Republican party gave its full support to civilian defense, to war production, to selective service, to price control, and to all phases of the war effort which required state co-operation with the Federal Government.

In 1945, when the Republican Party came into complete control of the state government, its leaders bent their energies toward aiding in the quick achievement of victory and the solution of the many post-war problems which faced the state. The needs of returning veterans, the state's position in commercial aviation and the reconversion problems of Indiana industry all became subjects of legislation during the session of the General Assembly in 1945.

SERVICE ORGANIZATIONS

The generosity and friendliness of the American people is nowhere so thoroughly exhibited as in the almost innumerable organizations they have formed on one basis or another to render assistance of some sort to their fellow beings. During the war, this characteristic produced an infinite variety of organized efforts to provide comforts and services for the men and women in uniform and for their dependents. In some cases, entirely new groups were formed for this sole purpose. In many others, older societies diverted much of their attention from their peace time pursuits to these war services. In this section of the Directory are presented a representative few of the very many organizations which had this service feature in common.

NATIONAL WOMEN'S SERVICE LEAGUE

This organization was formed in Indianapolis on September 18, 1941, "to assist in building and maintaining the morale of the men in the . . . armed forces of the United States or their allies and to maintain the morale of the mothers and wives of these men by constructive welfare work, entertainment and recreation." Wives and mothers of servicemen were eligible for membership. Although planned originally upon a national scale, the organization remained confined to the Indianapolis area and became inactive at the end of the war.

The League's most important service was the maintenance for three and a half years of a Canteen in the Federal Building for service to army, navy, and marine recruits. Assistance was given by many other groups, but League members assumed major responsibility, performed the "K.P." duties connected with the Canteen, and raised the money for its support. They also furnished recreation rooms and chapels at Billings General Hospital, Stout Field, Fort Harrison, and Camp Atterbury. After the Canteen closed in March, 1945, the League gave most of its attention to the men in the veterans hospitals.

AMERICAN WOMEN'S VOLUNTARY SERVICES, INC.

This war-born organization of business and professional women was created after American entry into the war as an agency through which women of all races and creeds could render more effective aid to their country. A chapter was established in Indianapolis in July, 1942.

Through public booths and the sponsorship of such special projects as the Navy War Bond Review, the Indianapolis chapter sold nearly $17 million worth of war bonds and stamps. Seventy members were enrolled as nurse's aides in local hospitals. Transportation was furnished to nearby military camps for entertainers. Pocket-sized books were collected for overseas troops and silk hosiery was contributed to the salvage drive. Typists and clerks volunteered their services to OCD and OPA offices. A fingerpainting project enlisted great interest. A committee of women lawyers provided free legal information to service personnel in the city's Servicemen Centers.

INDIANA CONGRESS OF PARENTS AND TEACHERS

Because of its close association with the public school system, this large and well-known organization enjoyed unique opportunities for wartime service in every community in Indiana. It assisted in the numerous campaigns among school children which resulted in the purchase of $15,000,000 worth of bonds, the collection of thousands of tons of salvage, and the cultivation of hundreds of Victory Gardens. Early in the war, members in the larger cities made block surveys and provided "block mothers" to look after children in the event of enemy attack. Members were particularly active in assisting with the issue of ration books through the schools and with the checking of OPA ceiling prices.

Parents and teachers were especially concerned with the general problem of child neglect in the midst of war. Parent-teacher associations set up many day-care centers for the children of working mothers. Community recreation centers especially for the teen-age group, were sponsored by several associations.

INDIANA FEDERATION OF BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL WOMEN

The State Federation consists of ninety local clubs and is, together with most of these clubs, affiliated with the International Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs. Membership is open to women in all types of business and in all professions. The state officers and district directors constitute the Executive Committee which transacts the principal business of the organization.

The normal program of promoting the interests of women in business and public life was almost shouldered aside, during the war years, by preoccupation with the war effort. Individual members and local clubs contributed clothing and money to relief drives, assumed heavy responsibilities in Red Cross, War Chest, and War Bond campaigns, led in salvage drives, contributed to Blood Banks, and served in USO clubs and canteens. Many local clubs undertook special projects such as purchasing a public address system for Wakeman Hospital, furnishing a sun room at Camp Atterbury, and sponsoring a Service Center. Club meetings were devoted to Red Cross work or the study of war and post-war problems. The State Federation co-operated in the Pin Money Bond Campaign in 1944, participated in the drive for Mobile Kitchens for Great Britain, and secured contributions for the purchase of 43 ambulance planes in 1943—a national record.

INDIANA FEDERATION OF CLUBS

The state unit of the General Federation of Women's Clubs consists of 604 clubs in 87 counties of Indiana with a total membership (in 1945) of nearly 30,000. The local clubs vary considerably in organization and character, but follow a general program devised by the national organization.

The national motto, "Unity in Diversity," was well exemplified during the war years by Indiana clubwomen, since they entered into almost every conceivable kind of wartime activity. A Department of National Defense, which later became the War Service Department, was set up by the Federation six months before Pearl Harbor. Its fourteen committees provided the necessary channels for war work by guiding similar committees organized in each club.

Special projects of the Federation included the gift of a Mobile Canteen to the Red Cross, the provision of art materials for therapy projects in Billings Hospital and abroad, the raising of funds for nursing scholarships, the recruitment of volunteers for the women's branches of the armed services, and the sale of war bonds. Sales by clubwomen totaled more than 7 million in the year ending May, 1944. Clubwomen could be found in every kind of "war work," from the assembly lines of war plants to the public schools where they helped to relieve the teacher shortage, and from organizing share-the-ride groups to going in a body to blood donor centers.

As early as 1942, the Federation established a Post War Planning Committee. Forums were held by this committee at the state universities and in Indianapolis, and questionnaires were distributed to form the basis for a study of juvenile delinquency in Indiana. Working through county judges and public school superintendents, the women's clubs made a vigorous and effective attack upon this serious post-war problem.

INDIANA FEDERATION OF COLORED WOMEN'S CLUBS

With the outbreak of World War II, the Indiana Federation of Colored Women's Clubs, consisting of 50 local clubs with 1,000 members in the principal cities of Indiana, devoted the major part of its program to hospitality and services for the men and women in uniform. War Service Clubs were formed within the state organization for the conduct of particular projects, such as the opening of a Day Center at Camp Atterbury, and the preparation of food and sleeping quarters at the Senate Avenue Service Men's Center in Indianapolis. The IFCWC co-operated fully in all bond drives and salvage campaigns and with such service organizations as the Red Cross and USO.

INDIANA FEDERATION OF MUSIC CLUBS

Music, with its stimulating and therapeutic effects upon the emotions, played an important role in the war. Realizing this, the Indiana Federation of Music Clubs and the National Music Federation, with which it is affiliated, devised a wartime program of activities by which music could make its fullest contribution to victory.

During the earlier months of the war, the federation was chiefly concerned with providing musical entertainment for training camps and USO's. A War Service Committee was created to sponsor these projects. The Special Projects Committee and the Philanthropic Music Committee were also active in providing music for servicemen.

In 1944, the national federation inaugurated a program of "Music in the Hospitals" and placed it under the direction of Mrs. Frank Cregor of Indianapolis, immediate past-president of the Indiana Federation. Funds were raised in various ways and applied to the purchase of musical equipment for hospital ships, transports, and government hospitals, much of this being in the form of record albums. Sound equipment for Wakeman Convalescent Hospital and for the Marion Veteran's Hospital, chimes for the chapel organ at Billings Hospital, and a piano for the Cold Springs Road Veteran's Hospital, were purchased specifically by the Indiana Federation. A post-war program of assistance to wounded musician-veterans has also been inaugurated under a Music Service Fund Committee.

KAPPA KAPPA KAPPA, INC.

This uniquely Hoosier sorority was founded in 1901, at the Girls' Classical School in Indianapolis. It now has 111 active chapters and 64 associate chapters, made up exclusively of Indiana women.

Tri Kappa's primary purposes have been the promotion of cultural, charitable, and educational programs. In World War II, the members' energies were diverted into a vigorous support of the war effort, individually and collectively. The establishment of a Small Sacrifice Fund produced more than $14,500 for Tri Kappa's varied war projects.

P.E.O. SISTERHOOD INDIANA STATE CHAPTER

With 38 chapters in Indiana, the P.E.O. Sisterhood stands as an excellent example of the almost innumerable ways in which an active women's organization could contribute to the winning of a great war. State officers were able to compile a partial report in 1946 which showed the following statistical data:

|  |                |
|--|----------------|
| Total purchases of bonds and stamps .....  | $3,000,000.00 |
| P.E.O. United Victory Fund .....   | $ 2,136.30    |
| Contributions to hospitals .....   | $ 1,125.00    |
| Contributions to USO .....   | $ 3,690.50    |
| P.E.O. members in USO work .....   | 109            |
| P.E.O. members in Red Cross work .....   | 492            |
| P.E.O. blood donors .....  | 52             |
| P.E.O. members serving on ration boards orwith other government agencies ..... | 85             |

This is only a small indication of the services rendered by chapters and individuals. The "United Victory Fund," sponsored by the Supreme Chapter, was devoted to the purchase of Red Cross Clubmobiles and packages for prisoners of war.

WOMAN'S BENEFIT ASSOCIATION

An interesting summary of the extent to which sacrifice and major effort characterized the civilian war front can be gleaned from the records of this unique organization. The Association itself is the largest fraternal benefit society in the world managed exclusively by women. Its 2,000 subordinate bodies, 94 of which are located in Indiana, are called Reviews. More than 8,000 Hoosier women are affiliated with these groups. Some of the younger members of the Reviews are organized into 14 Gamma Nu Sorority Clubs in Indiana. Each of these local societies carries on an active social service program.

Since home protection is one of the principal features of the Association's benefits, the extent to which war invaded the family circle was especially noted. Nearly every member reported at least one male relative in the service. One Review counted 21 sons and brothers as well as two of its own members in uniform. A large percentage of the membership entered the WAC, WAVES, or Nurses Corps. This personal interest in the armed services led to a heavy investment of time and effort in USO clubs and service hospitals. The Indianapolis Review earned $200 in proceeds from chicken dinners, picnics, and dances, and gave it to the USO fund.

Peru members gave parties four times yearly to wounded men in the Marion Hospital, and served 212 meals at the USO. The Valparaiso Review specialized in home entertainment for servicemen. Gamma Nu girls there donated $625 made in working as hat check girls to the Valparaiso USO, where they also served as hostesses. Other Gamma Nu clubs used money earned by three days' work in filling stations to buy Christmas gifts for overseas servicemen. Baking cookies and doughnuts, writing letters and sending gifts to servicemen were favorite projects.

Members were generally very active in Red Cross work, one having amassed a total of 1,250 hours service. Sweaters and scarves were knitted, bandages and surgical dressings made, and first aid instruction given. Several members served as nurses or nurses aides. Indiana members gave more than 100 pints of blood to the Red Cross Blood Bank.

Many of the Reviews undertook projects in the care of children whose parents worked in war industries. One LaPorte woman with seven children of her own, two of whom were in naval service, brought into her home three refugee children under four years of age. Contributions to relief drives were generous.

WBA Reviews found many ways in which to co-operate in salvage campaigns, in volunteer services to OPA and civilian defense, and in virtually every other kind of wartime activity. They were especially responsive to government appeals for bond purchases. Most of the Reviews had surplus general funds which they invested in war bonds. The Gamma Nu Sororities purchased a total of $25,000 in bonds and stamps. Individual workers added immensely to this total. What was said of these women could be pronounced as a fitting memorial to all Indiana citizens who worked through their respective organizations for common victory—"They have performed yeoman service and steadfast sacrifice in their loyalty and devotion to their country."

PART TWELVE POST-WAR PLANNING

The people of Indiana, with those from other states and nations, learned from painful experience after World War I that the problems of post-war readjustment are sometimes more difficult to solve than the more challenging crises of war-time. Tutored by that experience, they began to plan for the peace, almost before they had entered the war in 1941. The American genius for incorporation showed itself in a great variety of organizations—public and private, state and national, practical and philosophical—which arose during the war years and tried to mold the future. Their objectives ranged from simple schemes of maximum employment to dreams of outlawing war, but all had definite programs and strong conceptions of what they wanted. Some of these organizations, which also played an important role in the immediate responsibilities of war, have been treated in earlier sections of this Directory. Others were so intangible that it is not possible to capture them on paper. In the following pages are a few of those which were devoted primarily to post-war planning and whose operations involved and were important to Indiana people.

INDIANA COMMITTEE FOR VICTORY

A small group of Indiana citizens who were convinced that victory could be achieved not simply by defeating the armed forces of the enemy but by organizing world peace afterward, met at Indianapolis on March 19, 1942, and organized the Indiana Committee for Victory. The primary purpose of the Committee, in addition to pledging complete support to the government in the winning of the war, was "to work unceasingly for such understanding of world affairs and participation therein as will aid in the enactment by men of comprehension and good will of a peace which will secure to mankind in every country the right to live in freedom of spirit and safety of person, and of economic opportunity."

By means of an active publicity campaign, the Committee membership grew eventually to more than 600, reaching into every part of Indiana. A full-time executive secretary maintained an office in Indianapolis from which the Committee sent out a constant stream of educational materials advocating the organization of the United Nations and a co-operative American foreign policy. Prominent speakers were brought to Indiana cities; high school essay writing contests were sponsored; open forums were arranged in libraries and educational institutions; a speakers' bureau was established; broadcasts and transcriptions were made over Indiana radio stations; and thousands of pieces of literature were distributed. The Carnegie Endowment for International Peace made some contributions to this work, but the bulk of its financial support came from voluntary gifts. Booth Tarkington prepared some of the pamphlets printed by the Committee.

COMMITTEE FOR ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

World War II brought a thorough conversion of industry to the production of arms and military supplies, a maximum production of agricultural foods and fibres needed in warfare, a concentration of transport and service enterprises upon military priorities, and a marked redistribution of manpower and labor potential. It was felt by far-seeing businessmen that the tremendous wrench which the sudden cessation of fighting would give to this abnormal economy might well bring a major depression again to America unless intelligent plans were adopted for the orderly process of reconversion to peace time production. Late in 1942, a group of American businessmen, headed by Paul G. Hoffman, of South Bend, decided to organize the Committee for Economic Development as an instrument for planning in this direction.

The Indiana C. E. D. was formed on February 24, 1943, with the State Chamber of Commerce taking the lead in its organization. Local chairmen were chosen soon thereafter in 37 areas in the state. The State Committee devoted the major part of its attention to an attack upon the mass unemployment which was anticipated when Indiana industries were reconverted to peace production. It emphasized a program of public works, the modernization of industrial design and techniques, and the assumption of greater responsibility by private enterprise for full employment. In September, 1944, the Committee sponsored an "Indiana Reconversion Conference" in Indianapolis, at which specific recommendations for post-war economic planning were made by notable speakers.

INDIANA ECONOMIC COUNCIL

The same law which abolished the State Planning Commission<sup>1</sup> in 1943, established the Indiana Economic Council as its successor. The stated purpose of the new Council was "to make a thorough study and investigation of the natural resources of the State and of the problems of agriculture, industry, population, and allied matters" and to "formulate plans and make recommendations for the further development of the State's resources . . ."<sup>2</sup> in ways which might be helpful to her future population. The Legislature intended that the Economic Council should become the co-ordinating agency for post-war planning by all state, county, and municipal agencies.

The Council's membership of 22 is carefully distributed among ex officio administrative officers, legislators, and citizens "representative of the varied interest of the State," selected in various ways from both political parties. The Council maintains a rather large and active staff which is constantly engaged in research, analysis, publication, and in advising other branches of the government.

The Council has been responsible for studies of Indiana airports and airways, for the advanced planning of public works in local communities to alleviate post-war unemployment, for emergency activity in the matter of finding housing for returning veterans, for a study of county forest and other conservation measures, for the promotion of community planning commissions, and for a long range plan to increase state office building space. The results of these studies have, in many cases, already been translated into law.

NATIONAL RESOURCES PLANNING BOARD

Established on July 1, 1939, within the Executive Office of the President, the National Resources Planning Board was a research agency, authorized to collect the necessary information on which to base analyses and long-term studies of the national economy. In connection with the defense program it co-operated with the War Production Board on studies of industrial location, with state defense councils on community planning in war-boom areas, and with the Civil Service Commission in preparing a roster of scientific and specialized personnel. However, the bulk of its activity was concerned with planning for the post-war period: proposing the best use of the nation's material resources in converting to a peace economy; preparing a six-year federal program for the distribution and construction of public works; and studying the transportation, power, and industrial systems of communities.

One of the eleven regional field offices of the NRPB was located in Indianapolis where it worked closely with state and local planning agencies in preparing programs for the development, use and conservation of Indiana's resources. The Board was abolished by Congress in 1943.

PUBLIC WORKS PROGRAMMING OFFICE

Originally called the Public Work Reserve, this federal agency was created in May, 1941, and jointly sponsored by the Federal Works Agency and the National Resources Planning Board. It was administered as a WPA project. Its purpose was to assist cities, counties, and states in developing complete long-range programs of public works as a reservoir for the absorption of post-war unemployment.

A state field office was established by this agency in Indianapolis and a six-year program of federal works was laid out. However, the coming of actual warfare diverted attention from this project and the agency's work came to an end with the liquidation of WPA.

POSTWAR PUBLIC WORKS COUNCIL OF INDIANA

This organization was conceived by members of the Highway Materials and Equipment Association who were attending the Purdue Road School in January, 1944. Alarmed by the delay among local officials in getting their post-war public improvement projects on the planning boards, these men listed as their primary objective the "planning of needed public improvements for the purpose of creating postwar employment on an economically sound common sense basis."<sup>4</sup> A number of business and vocational associations concerned with this problem came into the Council. It sponsored public meetings with local officials for the discussion of post-war planning, and issued booklets which outlined methods for avoiding "another 'made-work' program after the war."

INDEX

A book of this size and character requires an index, yet makes the use of the ordinary kind prohibitive. It is obviously impossible to list again the 30,000 names already given in the text, or even the 1,800 agencies, firms, and organizations which have been mentioned. The General Index below is therefore confined to the titles used more frequently or prominently in the book and to those general terms which will make it a useful tool for ready reference. No proper names or geographical place names are included. All county offices and officials, whatever the customary designation may be, are listed under County; likewise all state officers and agencies under State; and all federal agencies and agents under U. S.

For those who may wish to cull the references in this book to the wartime activities within a particular county, or city, or both, two further indices are provided. Examination of the page references given for any local community will reveal a fairly complete record of that locality's civilian services. It will be noted that in the case of at least sixty-six types of wartime activity, the Directory carries its listing of personnel to the level of the local Hoosier community.
